

plant cell division in vacuolated cells

Interphase (G1)

The nucleus containing two chromosomes and a nucleolus is surrounded by nuclear pores. The cell is large, round, and full. Numerous small cytoplasmic vesicles containing active filaments radiate from the nucleus, extending through the vacuole to surround the nucleus (cytosol in the central space).

Mitosis: prophase and prophase

As the cell approaches prophase of mitosis, the prochromatin gradually condenses, pulling the nucleolus to the middle of the cell. Spindle fibers of tubulin grow across the division plane called the phragmosome. Most of the cell's gaseous vesicles move into the phragmosome. Along the edge of the phragmosome, actin filaments and microtubules collect to form the phragmoplast. Small vesicles (Golgi vesicles) move to the phragmosome and the tubulin spindle. The nuclear envelope disintegrates and the nucleus opens, which is completed this second step by the prophase band.

Mitosis: prometaphase

At prometaphase, the chromosomes begin condensing and the nuclear membrane quickly breaks down, followed by the breakdown of the cell wall and the cell membrane. The cell is smaller and more rounded. Microtubules form on the surface of the chromosomes, showing microtubules to attach.

Mitosis: metaphase

After some of the spindle microtubules attach to all the chromosomes, the chromosomes are aligned along an equatorial plane called the metaphase plate. About a 1/3 of the gaseous vesicles in the cell migrate into the middle spindle area and begin to become vesicles of cell plate formation, and vesicles still gather where the phragmosome has moved to. The remaining vesicles return to the rest of the central cytosol.

Interphase: S-phase

The cell replicates its DNA.

Interphase: G2

The daughter cell grows and expands. Separates the chromosomes and microtubules for mitosis. Starts throughout interphase.

Separates and cell membrane above

- Cytosol
- Cell membrane
- Cell wall
- Vacuole
- Part of the phragmosome

Not so wide for vacuole, there can be some one thousand gaseous vesicles per plant cell.

Cytokinesis: cell plate maturation

When the cell plate membrane comes into contact with the cell membrane, the two membranes fuse, and cellulose synthesizing enzymes break on the cell membrane. Fluid and the fluid-filled cell plate membrane, making cellulose and expands the cellulose in the cell plate. The gaseous vesicles make the gaseous that also goes into the cell wall. The new cell wall divides the parent cell into two daughter cells.

Mitosis and cytokinesis: telophase and cell plate expansion

As the chromosomes uncoil and nuclear membranes reform at opposite ends of the cell, the phragmoplast continues to move outward on the cell plate. Some phragmoplast microtubules become gaseous vesicles above the phragmosome but vesicles to collapse on the cell plate and the gaseous vesicles add to the cell plate at the edge.

Mitosis: early anaphase

The cohesive proteins that hold the two sister chromatids of each chromosome are broken. The chromatids on each sister chromatid pull them along the spindle microtubules, pulling the sister chromatids to separate ends of the cell. Microtubules a cellulose make out of cellulose and other things make from cellulose form, called the phragmoplast. Golgi vesicles line up at the edge of the phragmoplast, showing vesicles full of cell plate building material like cytoplasm.

Mitosis: Late anaphase

Guided by the microtubules of the phragmoplast, the gaseous vesicles edge of the phragmosome plate and into a cell wall plate. The phragmoplast vesicles collect toward the cell wall.
