Markets For Technology:

Markets for Technology Ashish Arora, Andrea Fosfuri, Alfonso Gambardella, 2004-01-30 The past two decades have seen a gradual but noticeable change in the economic organization of innovative activity Most firms used to integrate research and development with activities such as production marketing and distribution Today firms are forming joint ventures research and development alliances licensing deals and a variety of other outsourcing arrangements with universities technology based start ups and other established firms In many industries a division of innovative labor is emerging with a substantial increase in the licensing of existing and prospective technologies In short technology and knowledge are becoming definable and tradable commodities Although researchers have made significant advances in understanding the determinants and consequences of innovation until recently they have paid little attention to how innovation functions as an economic process This book examines the nature and workings of markets for intermediate technological inputs It looks first at how industry structure the nature of knowledge and intellectual property rights facilitate the development of technology markets It then examines the impacts of these markets on firm boundaries the division of labor within the economy industry structure and economic growth Finally it examines the implications of this framework for public policy and corporate strategy Combining theoretical perspectives from economics and management with empirical analysis the book also draws on historical evidence and case studies to flesh out its research results

Markets for Technology in Europe Christoph Grimpe, Wolfgang Sofka, Philipp Schulz, Geoffrey Thilo Borchhardt, 2019 Functioning markets for technology are an important determinant for the type scope and distribution of innovation activities in an economy However markets for technology are often underdeveloped or inefficient Existing theory attributes such imperfections to the supply side or differences in market designs We know comparatively little though about the structural forces that shape the demand side of markets for technology In this study we reason that demand depends on the sectoral pattern of innovation and the distance of a country's industry to the global technological frontier We explore these dimensions based on longitudinal industry level data from the Community Innovation Survey We find that the demand on markets for technology is particularly driven by science based industries and to a lesser degree by scale intensive industries Demand decreases though the closer industries are to the technological frontier These findings highlight sector specific opportunities and constraints for policies promoting markets for technology

Markets for Technology Ashish Arora, Andrea Fosfuri, Alfonso Gambardella, 1999 Markets for Technology \(Why Do We See Them, Why Don't We See More of Them, and Why Should We Care\). Andrea Fosfuri, Ashish Arora, Alfonso Gambardella, 2012 This essay explores the nature the functioning and the economic and policy implications of markets for technology Today the outsourcing of research and development activities is more common than in the past and specialized technology suppliers have emerged in many industries In a sense the Schumpeterian vision of integrating R D with manufacturing and distribution is being confronted by the older Smithian vision of division of labor The existence and efficacy of markets for technology can profoundly influence the creation and diffusion of new knowledge and hence economic growth of countries and the competitive position of companies The economic and managerial literatures have touched upon some aspects of the nature of these markets However a thorough understanding of how markets for technology work is still lacking In this essay we address two main questions First what are the factors that enable a market for technology to exist and function effectively Specifically we look at the role of industry structure the nature of knowledge and intellectual property rights and related institutions Second we ask what the implications of such markets are for the boundaries of the firm the specialization and division of labor in the economy industry structure and economic growth We build on this discussion to develop the implications of our work for public policy and corporate strategy

Competition Law's Innovation Factor Viktoria H S E Robertson, 2020-02-06 In recent years market definition has come under attack as an analytical tool of competition law Scholars have increasingly questioned its usefulness and feasibility That criticism comes into sharper relief in dynamic innovation driven markets which do not correspond to the static markets on which the concept of the relevant market was modelled This book explores that controversy from a comparative legal perspective taking into account both EU competition and US antitrust law It examines the manifold ways in which courts and competition authorities in the EU and US have factored innovation related considerations into market delineation covering innovative product markets product differentiation future markets issues going beyond market definition proper such as innovation competition innovation markets and potential competition intellectual property rights innovative aftermarkets and multi sided platforms This book finds that going forward the role of market definition in dynamic contexts needs to focus on its function of market characterisation rather than on the assessment of market power
