

2 Ship Dimensions and Form

The hull form of a ship may be defined by a number of dimensions and terms which are often referred to during and after building the vessel. An explanation of the principal terms is given below:

After Perpendicular (AP): A perpendicular drawn to the waterline at the point where the aft side of the rudder post meets the summer load line. Where no rudder post is fitted it is taken as the centre line of the rudder stock.

Forward Perpendicular (FP): A perpendicular drawn to the waterline at the point where the foreside of the stem meets the summer load line.

Length Between Perpendiculars (LBP): The length between the forward and aft perpendiculars measured along the summer load line.

Amidships: A point midway between the after and forward perpendiculars.

Length Overall (LOA): Length of vessel taken over all extremities.

Lloyd's Length: Used for obtaining scantlings if the vessel is classed with Lloyd's Register. It is the same as length between perpendiculars except that it must not be less than 96 per cent and need not be more than 97 per cent of the extreme length on the summer load line. If the ship has an unusual stem or stern arrangement the length is given special consideration.

Register Length is the length of ship measured from the fore-side of the head of the stem to the aft side of the head of the stern post or, in the case of a ship not having a stern post, to the fore-side of the rudder stock. If the ship does not have a stern post or a rudder stock, the after terminal is taken to be the aftermost part of the transom or stern of the ship. This length is the official length in the register of ships maintained by the flag state and appears on official documents relating to ownership and other matters concerning the business of the ship. Another important length measurement is what might be referred to as the IMO Length. This length is found in various international conventions such as the Load Line, Tonnage and SOLAS conventions and determines the application of requirements of those conventions to a ship. It is defined as 96 per cent of the total length on a waterline at 85 per cent of the least moulded depth measured from the top of keel, or the length from the fore-side of stem to the axis of rudder stock on that waterline, if that is greater. In ships designed with a rake of keel the waterline on which this length is measured is taken parallel to the design waterline.
