

CLINICAL RECORDS AND POST-MORTEM ILLUSTRATIONS OF TYPHUS OR SHIP FEVER.

By J. B. Upham, M.D., Boston.

CASE III.—George Ames, 48 years of age, of strong frame and plethoric habit, formerly addicted to intemperance, has been for several years an occupant in the House of Industry. For two or three years past he has officiated as nurse in the various wards connected with the hospital. His general health is good; he has a resolute will and strong powers of endurance. Since the first of May, he has had charge of one of the principal fever wards of the hospital.

On Sunday, June 20th, experienced feelings of languor and uneasiness—general soreness of muscles—loss of appetite—dull pain in head, back and joints, with considerable prostration of strength. The following day these symptoms increased in severity, but he made no complaint, and kept about attending to his usual duties in the ward. On the 22d, at the hour of visit, his condition attracted observation, and he was directed to keep his bed. He had taken that morning, on his own responsibility, two ounces of a mixture containing equal parts of tincture of rhubarb and castor oil, which had the effect of producing several abundant, dark-yellowish, fecal discharges;—his tongue was slightly coated—pulse good. He still persisted in attempting his customary occupations. Towards evening he had an aggravation of all the preceding symptoms, with nausea, retching and occasional chills, followed by intense heat.

On the 23d, symptoms still continued. He had intense cephalalgia—a dull and inexpressive face—suffused eyes—full and laboring pulse. Directed an emetic of ipecac., ʒ ss.—liq. acet. ammon.—light farinaceous diet.

The day following there was increasing prostration—constant and harassing pain in head, back and limbs—hot skin, thirst, restlessness, considerable nausea and uneasiness in the stomach. Towards evening on the 25th the headache and pain in the back sensibly abated—there was dizziness, increasing apathy, and some confusion of the intellect. He had been sponged and had taken mild diaphoretics, cool and acidulated drinks, and Dover's powder or morphia in minute doses at night.

26th.—Sixth day of fever. Complains of great weakness—expression
