Dignity of the Human Person and Primacy of Conscience

Recognition of the importance of freedom and in particular the freedom of conscience by the Second Vatican Council (cf. GS 16–17) is often referred to as a “Copernican revolution”¹. We have to consider, however, that the conciliar teaching is not completely new, but includes a return to a differentiated teaching on conscience in the long tradition of the Church. In this regard the Council Fathers primarily rethought important elements of Scripture and Tradition, in particular, the biblical sources (e.g. Rom 2:14–16), as well as teachings on conscience e. g. according to Augustine, Thomas Aquinas, and John Henry Newman² – even though not mentioning them by name. At the same time, the Council also accepted one of the main goals of modernity, by building its teaching on conscience on the dignity of the person and the role of individual critical reason. However, this could not be possible without a clear break with the modern ecclesiastical tradition, especially Neo-Scholasticism. This break was facilitated by a redefinition of the relationship of the Church and modernity, according to which the Church is understood as a free Church in a society that organizes itself legally and constitutionally in a free way³.
