

Life isn't always a pattern. Just because today is bad doesn't mean tomorrow will be. Just because you keep getting rejected doesn't mean you'll always be rejected. Just because things haven't worked out for a long time doesn't mean your life won't ever sort itself out or that you won't find that special person or get that job or reach that goal. Just because you've had a bad week or month or year doesn't mean you'll have a bad life.

Life is unpredictable. It takes time. Healing takes time. Overcoming obstacles takes time. It's not a process you can rush or control. And that can be terrifying because it means there might be bad things ahead that you can't prepare for. But it also means there might be some really incredible things waiting for you that you would never have imagined.

I know it's so hard to see it when you're stuck in a dark tunnel, but you have to trust that things won't be like this forever. What's happened so far doesn't have to dictate where you go. It's just one page in your book, or a few chapters. It's not how the story ends.

And if you start to doubt that, think back to where you were a year ago, or two or five. What struggles were you facing that you felt convinced you could never overcome, but did? Which goals did you feel certain you could never reach, but were able to meet or succeed in your own time? More than you think. So trust that something better is coming. It has before, so many times. It will this time too.
