Abstract

Background: Catheter ablation is effective in restoring sinus rhythm and left atrial appendage closure (LAAC) is increasingly used for stroke prevention in patients with atrial fibrillation (AF). We aimed to observe the feasibility and safety of performing AF ablation and LAAC in a single (one-stop) procedure.

Methods: Consecutive AF patients who underwent the combined procedure of AF ablation and LAAC with WATCHMAN device between March 2017 and September 2018 were prospectively enrolled. Baseline and intra-procedural parameters were evaluated. Three-month and subsequent 1-year follow-up were performed in all and earlier-enrolled subjects, respectively.

Results: A total of 178 AF patients (94 males, 68.9 ± 8.1 years) underwent the one-stop procedure with CHA₂DS₂-VASc score 3.3 ± 1.5 and HAS-BLED score 1.6 ± 1.0, respectively. Pulmonary vein isolation was achieved in all patients while additional linear ablation was applied if the operator deemed necessary, yielding immediate ablation success rate of 98.9% (176/178). In the subsequent LAAC, satisfactory seal (residual leak <5 mm) was achieved in all patients. One stroke and four cardiac perforations occurred peri-operatively. At 3-month follow-up, sinus rhythm and satisfactory seal were maintained in 153/178 (86.0%) and 178/178 (100%) patients, respectively. One stroke and one delayed cardiac tamponade occurred, while no device-related thrombus or device migration was observed. During the 1-year follow-up for the earlier enrolled subjects, 52/72 (72.2%) of the patients maintained sinus rhythm. There was no stroke or systemic embolism observed.

Conclusion: Combining catheter ablation and LAAC in a single procedure can be successfully and safely performed in non-valvular AF patients of Chinese population.

Introduction

While catheter ablation of atrial fibrillation (AF) is effective in arrhythmic burden reduction and life quality improvement,^[1-3] AF ablation per se has limited preventive effect on stroke and systematic embolism in the long-term follow-up, suggesting a need for post-ablation anti-coagulation in patients with high stroke risks.^[4-8] However, a number of patients could not tolerate oral anti-coagulation (OAC) due to high bleeding risks or unwilling to receive long-term pharmacologic therapy.^[9,10] Under such circumstances, left atrial appendage (LAA) closure (LAAC) has recently emerged as an acceptable non-pharmacologic approach for stroke prevention in non-valvular AF patients.^[11-13] Clinical trials and real-world registries have demonstrated that LAAC with WATCHMAN device is comparable to warfarin in stroke prevention and may provide additional reduction in major bleeding and mortality.^[14,15]

Combining catheter ablation for AF and LAAC in a single (one-stop) procedure has raised increasing attention recently. The rationale of the combined strategy is based on several shared operative approaches, including femoral venous catheterization, trans-septal puncture and peri-operative management. Despite previous studies reported promising results,^[16,17] very limited Chinese population were included in those patient series. In the present study, we sought to address the safety and efficacy of the one-stop procedure in AF patients of Chinese population.
