Time spent reading is the key to improving reading comprehension. Typically, a student has learned to decode words and has been learning to read in grades K through 2. By grade 3, the focus for students becomes more toward reading to learn (comprehension.) Students with special needs may also benefit from using the strategies that are laid out here at a pace determined by the teacher.

Most students will gain a higher level of understanding for subject area content when the teacher uses a reading strategy. Here are two strategies, one for reading stories (read aloud stories included), and another for content-area teachers who use textbooks or on-line articles.

Part 1: Reading a story. This portion of the resource is for use when students are reading a fictional or non-fictional story (narrative). Are you reading a story to your students? These templates may also be used by students during a read-aloud. Preview new vocabulary prior to reading the selections.

Part 2: Reading subject-related content for science, social studies, and math texts.
