Biodeterioration 7 D. R. Houghton, R.N. Smith, H.O. Eggins, 2012-12-06 Because of the magnificent response to the call for papers for the 7th International Biodeterioration Symposium held at Cambridge UK some difficulties have been experienced in the editing of these proceedings The numbers of papers submitted exceeded expectation and because of this it has been necessary to accommodate those not actually in the proceedings into the International Biodeterioration journal A small number of papers were not suitable for publication and were therefore eliminated Many authors disregarded the guidelines laid down for the length of submitted papers However every attempt has been made to accommodate the maximum number of contributions in the proceedings The original selection included those which most nearly conformed to the length requirement Even so this has meant in many cases cutting down the text eliminating tables and or illustrations and pruning the reference list When references have been trimmed a note has been included to the effect that an extended list may be obtained from the author senior author Where it was not possible to carry out these procedures without seriously altering the text and the import of the paper they have been included amongst those to be published in the journal International Biodeterioration The exceptions to the procedures outlined above are the invited review papers which have been presented in full Happily the authors have been conscientious in keeping to the guidelines laid down for these contributions

Microbial Enhanced Oil Recovery E.C. Donaldson, G.V. Chilingarian, T.F. Yen, 1989-02-01 The use of microorganisms and their metabolic products to stimulate oil production is currently receiving renewed interest worldwide This technique involves the injection of selected microorganisms into the reservoir and the subsequent stimulation and transportation of their in situ growth products in order that their presence will aid in further reduction of residual oil left in the reservoir after secondary recovery is exhausted Although unlikely to replace conventional microbial enhanced oil recovery this unique process seems superior in many respects Self duplicating units namely the bacteria cells are injected into the reservoir and by their in situ multiplication they magnify beneficial effects This new approach to enhancement of oil recovery was initiated in 1980 and the first results were published in the proceedings of two international conferences This book evolved from these conferences and was designed to encompass all current aspects of microbial enhanced oil recovery the development of specific cultures increase of the population for field application various methods for field applications and the results and the environmental concerns associated with this newly developed technology It provides a comprehensive treatise of the subject and is arranged to show the laboratory development of microbes suited to microbial enhanced oil recovery and the perpetuation of the special cultures in a petroleum reservoir Thus this book has specific usefulness in the laboratory the oilfield and the classroom Although not written as a text book it can be used as a reference volume for graduate studies in enhanced oil recovery

Art, Biology, and Conservation Robert John Koestler, 2003 Despite the perception that artworks are timeless and unchanging they are actually subject to biological attack from a variety of sources from bacteria to fungi to insects This groundbreaking volume which publishes the proceedings of a conference held at The Metropolitan Museum of Art in 2002 explores how the development of these organisms can be arrested while preserving both the work of art and the health of the conservator The richly illustrated text containing the writings of over 40 scientists and conservators is divided into sections on stone and mural paintings paper textiles wood and archaeological materials treatment and prevention and special topics The artworks and cultural properties discussed include among many others Paleolithic cave paintings Tiffany drawings huts built by early Antarctic explorers and a collection of toothbrushes taken from
