

MICROECONOMIC ANALYSIS

Microeconomic Analysis

- Microeconomics attempts to examine or explain the behavior of individual units in the economy by doing analysis on their economic decision-making process on a smaller scale.
- Involves the use of simplified economic models and assumptions to facilitate understanding of the behavior of consumers and producers.
- It is assumed that both consumers and producers always act with economic rationality, the former trying to maximize satisfaction or happiness out of his/her consumptions of goods and services and the latter trying to maximize profit or minimize cost of producing the good and services.
- using simplified models involves use of assumptions.

Microeconomic Assumptions (Ceteris Paribus)

- define the set of circumstances in which a particular economic model is most likely to be applicable.
- Involves the Ceteris Paribus assumptions, a Latin phrase which means 'all other things remaining equal'. The concept of Ceteris Paribus is important in economics because in the real world it is usually hard to isolate all different factors needed in the analysis.
- Invoking the assumption of Ceteris Paribus allows isolation of the effect of a change in one variable on another variable by assuming that all other factors do not change. More formally, the Ceteris Paribus Assumption entails that nothing changes except the factors being studied.

Requirements for Microeconomic Analysis

- ❖ Use of economic data. Data can be processed in different forms (graphical or tabular) to obtain some insights necessary for making a good decision.
- ❖ Needs a lot of graphs and tables because it uses more numbers and tracks more trends than other social studies subjects.

Table 1 below shows an example of raw data on 50 soft drink purchases. Using frequency count or the number of purchases for a particular soft drink, the data on soft drinks can be processed using graphical and tabular approaches. These represented in Table 2 and Figure 1.
