

AMERICAN HISTORY – RIASSUNTO

Chapter 1- Beginnings: Pre-history to 1763

Human settlement on the continent of North America began 15.000 years ago, when people from Siberia come by water into Alaska. First Americans spread southward and eastward, and distinctive groups with differing languages, social organization, religious practices and sources of livelihood evolved. By 1500 the population was an estimated seven to ten million people. Millions more lived in Mesoamerica and in South America (Mayan, Aztec, Incan).

These civilizations remained unknown in Europe. Apart from isolated contacts (Leif Erikson, other Norse voyagers), the people of the Americas and Europe knew nothing of each other.

The age of European exploration

15th century, Europe: intellectual ferment, technological innovations, economic changes. Europeans were seeking faster routes to Asia, Africa and India. One of those, Christopher Columbus, was financed by Spanish monarchs and in 1492 he made landfall on an island he called San Salvador and still convinced that he had found the Indies, he called the local islanders Indians.

Economic, political and religious motives drove this exploratory fever. Columbus himself was gripped by ambitions for wealth and honors, and zeal to convert the Indians to Christianity. The monarchs sought to extend their domains.

The spread of European settlements

The watery trail blazed by Columbus soon became heavily travelled as Europe's seagoing powers staked their claims. Spanish settlements in Florida, New Mexico, in the Caribbean, Mexico and Central and South America brought a series of Spanish-speaking soldiers, adventurers, colonial administrators, and Catholic missionaries. The Dutch soon followed (Henry Hudson in 1609; in 1625 the Dutch East India Company established Nieuw Amsterdam on Manhattan Island).

The English came late to this race for empire but soon made up for lost time. The Protestant Reformation that reached England in the 1530s gave England's American colonies, except for Maryland, a strong Protestant cast.

England's first permanent foothold lay in Virginia, after Elizabeth I, the Virgin Queen. In 1607 a group of settlers reached Virginia and built a fort, Jamestown (James I). disease, starvation, Indian attacks carried off most of the initial settlers. However, tobacco became a profitable export as a pipe-smoking vogue swept Europe.

More English colonies spread southward, from North and South Carolina to Georgia, encountering Spain's outpost in Florida. Tobacco was very important, along with rice and indigo. The Protestant Church of England drew the most adherents, but the region's religious mosaic also included Scottish Presbyterians who favoured more decentralized church governance; Quakers, Methodists and Baptists.

Farther north, in today's Massachusetts, English religious dissenters, separated from the Church of England, planted the Plymouth settlement. These pilgrims arrived from Holland, where they lived in exile. In 1621 they held a harvest feast, shared with local Indians, which became Thanksgiving.

The most important Massachusetts Bay colony was established at Boston in 1630. The founders were not the Separatists but Puritans (desire to purify the Church of England).

New Englanders began to prosper, achieving high levels of health and longevity. Along with farming, fisheries and urban occupations, they conducted oceangoing trade: timber, grain, naval stores, dried codfish, sugar, tea, furniture... to England and England's island colonies.

In the Middle Atlantic region, Pennsylvania, New York, Delaware and New Jersey rounded out North American colonies. In 1661 William Penn, with the granted charter by Charles II, established a new colony
