Abstract The Pathways for Students into Health Professions program is one of four nationally funded programs by the Maternal and Child Health Bureau of the US Department of Health and Human Services to support the training of undergraduate students, particularly from under-represented minority groups to pursue maternal and child health professions. To assess the program's impact on student ratings, knowledge, and interest in maternal and child health professions, a baseline survey on student ratings and knowledge in maternal and child health topics and careers, public health topics, and career development topics was provided to 32 students at the beginning of their first year in the program and approximately 1 year after participation. Half of the students (16 students) in the program from 2009–2011 were from traditionally underrepresented minority groups. After participation, students reported significantly higher ratings of interest in maternal and child health topics and careers and in receiving adequate academic and career guidance. Students also reported significantly higher knowledge of public health, childhood and maternal morbidity and mortality, health care disparities, and life course health development. The program's didactic, experiential, and mentorship activities are changing student ratings and knowledge in a favorable direction toward maternal and child health careers and topics. Undergraduate training programs may be an important mechanism to strengthen the pipeline of a diverse health-care workforce.

Background/Introduction

Healthy People 2020 highlights the need to improve the health and well-being of women, infants, children, and families and is an important public health goal for the United States (US) [1]. To effectively address this goal, an array of healthcare professions with an understanding and interest in caring for these unique populations is necessary. Furthermore, an emphasis on a culturally diverse and representative healthcare workforce is also needed given the rapid growth of Latino and Asian populations in the US [2–5]. Effective maternal and child health (MCH) pipeline programs can be one way to meet these healthcare workforce goals.

Few MCH pipeline programs extend training to undergraduate students and more commonly focus on post-graduate or terminal degree professionals [6]. Addressing training at the undergraduate level, however, provides an important opportunity to expose students to maternal and child health professions. A small number of undergraduate programs have focused on specific areas of public health such as interdisciplinary training, behavioral

Pathways For Minorities Into The Health Professions:

Pathways for Minorities Into the Health Professions Pedro J. Lecca, Thomas D. Watts, 1989-10-19 This book introduces the reader to the scope and extent of minority underrepresentation in the health professions Underrepresented minority groups include Afro Americans Hispanics and Native Americans Drs Lecca and Watts have cited a number of studies and papers describing trends in minority enrollment in health profession institutions Among the areas which the authors focus on are the recruitment and admissions process which they note need intensive reexamination by higher education administrators and educators They describe examples of academic enrichment and retention programs They suggest that minority retention and the ultimate goal increase in graduation will only be achieved if financial and other forms of institutional and private public support are forthcoming The book concludes with some modest recommendations Tests on the Pathway to a Health Career, 1989 Health Professions Educational Assistance Amendments of 1971 United States.
