PREVENTING & MANAGING DISABLING INJURY AT WORK

PREVENTING & MANAGING DISABLING INJURY AT WORK

Edited by Terrence Sullivan and John Franks

Work-related disability is an increasingly important issue in businesses and organizations, in terms of cost and competitiveness as well as being an obvious social and ethical issue. Moreover, changes in the nature of work demand a new approach to this relatively important but often studied topic.

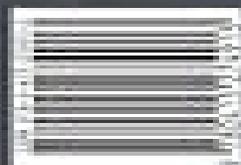

This volume will have been one of the contributors to the 2007-2008 research project on disabling injury events with multinational primary businesses. It is engaging in the key questions in effective primary prevention and secondary injury management, and in assessing the value of a range of compensation and economic recovery and regulatory approaches. These issues are examined and taken together in both a unique evidence-based approach that research work revealing what works best in the prevention of workplace accidents. It also will address the changing nature of the workplace and work, the current evidence on what constitutes effective injury and compensation approaches in the workplace, the challenges for prevention, and the essential nature of the workplace, the worker, the injury, and the worker in the recovery process and in the prevention of subsequent disabling events at work.

This volume brings together a group of leading researchers in work-related and disabling injury prevention to address a work-related disability, many of whom already run successful programs at work through projects in Network of Centers for Excellence in Health Research funded by Ontario, Canada, it is well illustrated with case studies and good examples of what must be done to prevent and manage disabling injury events at work. It is a must-read for all those who are interested in preventing and managing disabling injury events at work.
