Introduction

Minimally invasive surgery (MIS), including both traditional laparoscopic and robot-assisted laparoscopic approaches, has increasingly become the standard of care for urologic abdominal and pelvic surgery. Many of the benefits of MIS are derived from demonstration of equivalent oncologic or functional outcomes while decreasing perioperative complications and reducing hospital stay, narcotic requirements, and recovery times. These benefits are contrasted with increased operative costs, and, accordingly, prevention and management of MIS complications of urologic surgery is of central importance to a successful minimally invasive surgical practice.

Obese patients deserve special consideration including the potential need for longer instruments and higher levels of pneumoperitoneum. However, obese patients undergoing major laparoscopic renal and adrenal surgeries have been shown to have lower rates of complications versus the open approach (29 vs 67 %) [2], and this finding has subsequently been confirmed at multiple centers covering all ranges of renal procedures [3–7]. Pregnant patients are recommended to have their pneumoperitoneum limited to 10 mmHg due to decreased venous return, and the second trimester is the preferred timeframe if surgery
