Integrated Coastal Management Biliana Cicin-Sain, 1993 Fundamentals of Integrated Coastal Management A. Vallega, 2013-06-29 by Elisabeth Mann Borgese Founder and Honorary President International Ocean Institute Adalberto Vallega has been for decades a master and great teacher of integrated coastal management and Mediterranean cooperation This new book of an almost encyclopaedic scope is a most original contribution to the rapidly growing literature on the subject of equal value to the academic community which will greatly appreciate the theoretical historic and philosophical underpinning of the work and to the practitioner the planner regulator and manager who will find in these pages most useful checklists for his duties and responsibilities Vallega perceives the need for Integrated Coastal Area Management ICAM in the broader context of the ongoing third industrial revolution which he calls the trans industrial stage in its interaction with climate change There have been profound changes in the economies of the industrialized countries The development of the new High Technologies including micro electronics genetic engineering new materials has accelerated the transition from an economic system based primarily on production to one based very largely on services This in turn has facilitated globalization of production systems and services including the financial system as well as the migration of people The ongoing global Great Peo ple s Migration is generally from the hinterland to the coasts where already today over 60 percent of the human population resides exercising unprecedented pressures on the coastal and marine environment Clearly this justifies the current emphasis at global regional and national levels on the need for coastal management

The role of indicators in integrated coastal management Stefano Belfiore, 2003

Organisational Tools for Integrated Coastal Zone Management Valerie Anne Cummins, 2011 The first objective of this thesis is to suggest a model for participation in ICZM A second objective is to set out normative theory of Sustainability Science between researchers and managers in coastal zone management A qualitative approach to the research is adopted to derive lessons learned from coastal management in Ireland and from case studies across North West Europe The findings suggest that ICZM is still relevant and that a major effort is required to move from the rhetoric surrounding ICZM to putting ICZM into action The application of the principle of Public Participation in ICZM has hindered progress particularly because decision makers are reluctant to relinquish control to the stakeholder The results suggest that contrary to the literature a consensus based approach to decision making can have a limited effect on the attitudes and behaviour of stakeholders making participation inappropriate in helping in the transition to sustainability A broader view of participation needs to be adopted where citizens can be empowered by both active and passive methods of participation and communication Methods for scientific engagement in ICZM also have to be revised The Expert Couplet Node ECN tried and tested in the thesis can be applied as a workable model for ICZM This brings research groups together with Local Authorities in a meaningful way at the local level Finally recommendations for ICZM in Ireland suggest that despite a reluctance to adopt an integrated approach to date ICZM provides the only credible means of overcoming what has been a dysfunctional approach to coastal and marine management in Ireland since the foundation of the State An organisational model that involves the weight of legislation and a focal point for national level coordination is advocated More importantly a paradigm shift is required Organisational capital needs to be built where a new culture of policy making can be influenced by a continuous reflection on current system changes and the adaptation of policy responses accordingly
