surface ships against enemy missiles and UAVs If two or three of them are successfully developed and deployed the result might be considered not just a game changer but a revolution Rarely has the Navy had so many potential new types of surface ship air defense weapons simultaneously available for development and potential deployment Although the Navy in recent years has made considerable progress in developing technologies for these new weapons a number of significant development challenges remain Overcoming these challenges will require additional development work and ultimate success in overcoming them is not guaranteed The issue for Congress is whether to approve reject or modify the Navy s funding requests and proposed acquisition strategies for these three potential new weapons Potential oversight questions for Congress include the following Using currently available air defense weapons how well could Navy surface ships defend themselves in a combat scenario against an adversary such as China that has or could have large numbers of missiles and UAVs How would this situation change if Navy surface ships in coming years were equipped with SNLWS EMRG GLGP or some combination of these systems How significant are the remaining development challenges for SNLWS EMRG and GLGP Are current schedules for developing SNLWS EMRG and GLGP appropriate in relation to remaining development challenges and projected improvements in enemy missiles and UAVs When does the Navy anticipate issuing roadmaps detailing its plans for procuring and installing production versions of SNLWS EMRG and GLGP on specific Navy ships by specific dates Will the kinds of surface ships that the Navy plans to procure in coming years have sufficient space weight electrical power and cooling capability to take full advantage of SNLWS and EMRG What changes if any would need to be made in Navy plans for procuring large surface combatants i e destroyers and cruisers or other Navy ships to take full advantage of SNLWS and EMRGs Given the Navy s interest in HPV how committed is the Navy to completing the development of EMRG and eventually deploying EMRGs on Navy ships Are the funding line items for SNLWS EMRG and GLDP sufficiently visible for supporting congressional oversight
