HUMAN RELATIONSHIPS:

"Man cannot live without love. He reveals a being that is indispensible for himself: his life is possible if love is not revealed to him, if he does not encounter love, if he does not experience it and make it his own, if he does not participate intimately in it".
(Pope John Paul II - Redemptio Homini)

Human love is supportive, enriching and healing; it produces harmony, unity and fulfilment. The very revealing of true love to another person is a purifying and wholesome experience.

A life without love is incomplete and disappointing. This deprivation, especially if it starts from childhood, is the origin of social malaise, either withdrawn and introspective or aggressive and disruptive.

It is within this setting that the pastor must encourage those who seek his guidance. But the pastor must unfold a further dimension which is not at first apparent. The love between people is very special, but its origins and its worth are to be found in God. God is the ultimate source of genuine love and when people experience love at the human level they are enjoying something of the divine love. In turn, a true love between people, originating as it does from God, will lead those loving people back to God. All human love is a reflection of the love in God which is the life of the Trinity. It is this divine dimension which not only enriches human love but also reveals something of God's love for us.

Each person is made in "the image and likeness of God". The more we know and understand another person the more we should be able to recognize something of God in that other person. True personal relationships should develop this "seeing" of God in one another, and loving relationships within marriage or family or friendship should reveal this divine likeness more explicitly than casual acquaintances. Even within friendships or family there can be a differing degree of this revelation because human beings are different and they do not respond in exactly the same way to every other person.

All this means that attraction between people within the accepted settings of marriage, family and friendship is only possible. Initially, because of God's love for us and because we are made for God. Love between human beings is all part of being drawn up into this divine love and the search for union with another person is essentially a search for that total union with God which is the ultimate goal of the human person.

Our human loving is all part of longing for God and, in our human loving we are seeking out a point of contact between earth and heaven, between created and the Creator. Between the many who are trying to love and the One who is total love. This search for a meaning points between the human and the divine to really a deep desire to join the loved one up to the source of love, God. Or, looking at the loving relationship from a more human viewpoint, it is a longing for the completely loving God to enter and uplift humanity and this point of intersection of divine and human is the Incarnation and the sharing of the Incarnation with every person.

It is only when the pastor has presented this total meaning of inter-personal relationships that those seeking his guidance can understand the special forms which these relationships can take and appreciate their appropriate expression.

The special relationship between a woman and a man which we call marriage is an intensification of that general affection we must have for all who enjoy God's love and are made in His image. Ideally, the man and wife focus their love more and more intensely on one another until there is that unshakable joining of each other in the personal union. This is more than a coming together of bodies. It is the union of minds and the complete unity of bodies who are prepared to surrender everything to one another. It is the culmination of a loving relationship and, at the same time, the growth point from which the man and woman move on to the deeper sharing of love which, like all love, has its origins in God. In this God-designed act is total and creative. It is exclusive, not in the negative sense of setting aside all love for other people, but it is exclusive in that each an unique and unique a gift of oneself could only be shared with one other person. This form of love expressed in this unique way must be total and irrevocable if it is to be true to all it claims to express.

Friendship like marriage is part of the overflow of God's love into his creation. The love between friends, like the love between wife and husband or between parents and children, finds its source in God and, ideally, should be seeking to uplift people to experience and appreciate the divine love which envelopes all love.

Friendship implies a closeness: a coming together of similar tastes and outlooks, a mutual attraction of spirit. Much has been written about the stability of friendship and friendship can be quoted from all history including the lives of the saints. Friendship between persons of the same sex or different sexes is part of the normal inter-personal relationship within the human race.

Why, then, we can identify the homosexual union and it is important for the pastor to be sensitive to the special features which may be
