

CONSEQUENTIALISM

Consequentialism is a theory of normative ethics that states that the moral value of an action or decision should be judged based on its consequences.

DEFINITION

Consequentialism can be broken down into two core beliefs:

1. That the consequences of an act are what ultimately matter when assessing its moral worth
2. That this evaluation should focus on the overall good for society as a whole rather than on individual gains or losses.

EXAMPLE

Harsh Punishments: A consequentialist may support harsh punishments for contravening laws because the consequence of the punishment acts as a deterrent. Some people will be punished perhaps unfairly, but in total, less people will break the law, so the harshness of the punishment is justified.
