The Politics of Defence Budgeting Michael D. Hobkirk,1984 World War II exposed weaknesses in the management of defense resources leading the United Kingdom in 1946 and the United States in 1947 to centralize their defense organizations Although each organization has evolved differently both share the problem of interservice rivalry over resource allocation to competing service missions and weapons systems Michael Hobkirk a Ministry of Defense Under Secretary now retired argues that this intramural rivalry obstructs coherent defense planning His examination of the bureaucratic politics of resource allocation in the Ministry of Defence and the Department of Defense points up the strengths and weaknesses of both structures Combining the best features of each system he proposes a hypothetical ideal defense organization Such an organization would include a powerful central staff a planning programming budgeting system with functional categories for specific service tasks a long term budget system for future planning and most important a permanent cadre of civilian staff at the highest level In an era of ever more constrained resources and changing strategic requirements the need for maximum benefit from resources expended remains self evident This study should help defense planners students of organizational theory and those who would better understand the defense policies of our allies

Security Studies for the 1990s Richard H. Shultz,Roy Godson,Ted Greenwood,1993 The United States is grappling with a new security framework to replace the structure of the Cold War era American policymakers face a host of challenges including regional conflicts ethnic tensions and weapons proliferation that commanded little attention in the past And tomorrow is likely to bring new concerns barely on today s horizon Despite these changes the study of national security remains largely a creature of the Cold War The security studies discipline needs to be overhauled But how should it be revised so that tomorrow s citizens and experts are equipped to understand and help manage new challenges One option is to downgrade security studies and divert educational resources elsewhere Another is to redefine the subject to include the study of an all encompassing list of international problems The third choice is to retain basic definitions concepts and subjects while also making significant adjustments Security Studies for the 1990s addresses all three options This book is the first to reexamine security studies in the post Cold War era Scholars and directors from leading security studies programs representing a cross section of viewpoints on foreign affairs discuss what new material needs to be taught and which courses and concepts should be recast Each chapter provides an indepth review of a major security studies course proposing needed changes and a model syllabus Subjects include intelligence policy global environmental problems the causes and termination of wars and collective security A chapter on the teaching of ethics a subject often neglected in the past is also featured BOOK JACKET Title Summary field provided by Blackwell North America Inc All Rights Reserved
