Food Derived Bioactive Metabolites: Unlocking their Potential Health Benefits and Medical Potential Alessandra Durazzo, Ruyu Yao, Massimo Lucarini, 2026-02-13

The intricate relationship between medicines and foods spans across various cultures and traditions. In China, for instance, the concept of food medicines blurs the line between nourishment and therapeutic intervention, while in Indian cultures, medical practices often encompass food preparations. Components isolated from these food medicines can serve preventative roles, support physiological functions, or act as targeted treatments due to their interaction with specific receptors. Given these overlapping domains, developing a comprehensive understanding of the scientific potential of food-derived metabolites becomes crucial. Current investigations have delved into the biochemical profiles of diverse botanical sources, including medicinal plants, fruits, vegetables, whole grains, nuts, and legumes. These studies have uncovered a wealth of biologically active compounds, such as polyphenols, phytosterols, proteins, amines, and carotenoids. Growing evidence highlights the therapeutic promise of these bioactive compounds, showcasing their ability to modulate biological pathways associated with disease. The intricate interplay between plant-derived compounds and cellular signaling pathways offers promising therapeutic avenues. By harnessing these interactions through targeted interventions, phytochemicals have the potential to prevent or mitigate various pathological conditions. Despite the abundant reservoir of active compounds within ethnopharmacology, significant knowledge gaps remain regarding their precise mechanisms of action and optimal formulations. Enhancing our understanding of ethnopharmacological strategies is paramount for developing precise and effective treatments. This Research Topic aims to consolidate global trends, current insights, and knowledge frameworks pertaining to ethnopharmacological interventions and the health benefits of food-derived bioactive metabolites. We invite original research and review articles that explore the therapeutic potential of plant-derived ethnobotanical interventions. Submissions encompassing pre-clinical and clinical studies, as well as reviews elucidating the health and wellness benefits of plants and their compounds, are welcomed. The central theme seeks to deepen our understanding of the contributions of ethnopharmacology and advance the field of plant-based therapies. Submissions may include, but are not limited to, the following themes:

1. Conventional and innovative extraction techniques for creating novel food-based medicinal products
2. Pharmacological properties of food-derived bioactive metabolites
3. Contributions of food-derived bioactive metabolites in drug discovery
4. Analytical challenges associated with food-derived bioactive metabolites
5. Bioactivity and functional characteristics of food-derived bioactive metabolites
6. Functional foods and dietary supplements as potential new medicinal sources
7. Other related areas within the domain of food-derived bioactive metabolites

Potential Health Risks to DOD Firing-Range Personnel from Recurrent Lead Exposure National Research Council, Division on Earth and Life Studies, Board on Environmental Studies and Toxicology, Committee on Toxicology, Committee on Potential Health Risks from Recurrent Lead Exposure of DOD Firing Range Personnel, 2013-04-20 Lead is a ubiquitous metal in the environment and its adverse effects on human health are well documented Lead interacts at multiple cellular sites and can alter protein function in part through binding to amino acid sulfhydryl and carboxyl groups on a wide variety of structural and functional proteins In addition lead mimics calcium and other divalent cations and it induces the increased production of cytotoxic reactive oxygen species Adverse effects associated with lead exposure can be observed in multiple body systems including the nervous cardiovascular renal hematologic immunologic and reproductive systems Lead exposure is also known to induce adverse developmental effects in utero and in the developing neonate Lead poses an occupational health hazard and the Occupational Safety and Health Administration OSHA developed a lead standard for general industry that regulates many workplace exposures to this metal The standard was promulgated in 1978 and encompasses several approaches for reducing exposure to lead including the establishment of a permissible exposure limit PEL of 50 g m³ in air an 8 hour time weighted average TWA exposure guidelines for instituting medical surveillance guidelines for removal from and return to work and other risk management strategies An action level of 30 g m³ an 8 hour TWA for lead was established to trigger medical surveillance in employees exposed above that level for more than 30 days per year Another provision is that any employee who has a blood lead level BLL of 60 g dL or higher or three consecutive BLLs averaging 50 g dL or higher must be removed from work involving lead exposure An employee may resume work associated with lead exposure only after two BLLs are lower than 40 g dL Thus maintaining BLLs lower than 40 g dL was judged by OSHA to protect workers from adverse health effects The OSHA standard also includes a recommendation that BLLs of workers who are planning a pregnancy be under 30 g dL In light of knowledge about the hazards posed by occupational lead exposure the Department of Defense DOD asked the National Research Council to evaluate potential health risks from recurrent lead exposure of firing range personnel Specifically DOD asked the National Research Council to determine whether current exposure standards for lead on DOD firing ranges protect its workers adequately The committee also considered measures of cumulative lead dose Potential Health Risks to DOD Firing Range Personnel from Recurrent Lead Exposure will help to inform decisions about setting new air exposure limits for lead on firing ranges about whether to implement limits for surface contamination and about how to design lead surveillance programs for range personnel appropriately
