ABSTRACT

Objective Many children with progressive myopia are still prescribed single-vision correction. An investigation into UK eyecare practitioners' (ECPs) perceptions of myopia management was carried out to ascertain factors which may be limiting its implementation and uptake within clinical practice.

Methods and analysis Online focus groups were held with UK ECPs. Participants were encouraged to discuss their knowledge of the available myopia management options, their perception of how myopia management is being delivered in the UK and any barriers limiting ECPs' prescribing of these management options in practice. The discussions were transcribed and analysed thematically.

Results Focus groups were held with 41 ECPs from primary and secondary eyecare. ECPs felt that provision of myopia management in the UK is variable. Most ECPs believe they have sufficient knowledge, but felt a lack of confidence in decision-making and practical experience. Less experienced ECPs sought more definitive guidance to support their decision-making. ECPs desired clarity on their duty of care obligations and were concerned over possible future litigation if they had not offered, or referred for, myopia management when indicated. The greatest barrier appears to be financial—treatment is expensive and ECPs are uncomfortable communicating this to parents. Many barriers were indicative of systemic problems within UK eyecare, such as commercial pressures, inadequate National Health Service funding and poor public awareness of paediatric eyecare.

Conclusion Myopia management is not implemented consistently across the UK. To improve accessibility, changes are required at multiple levels, from individual ECPs through to wider stakeholders in UK eyecare provision.

INTRODUCTION

Myopia is a refractive state occurring when light is focused anterior to the retina, resulting in distance vision blur. The International Myopia Institute (IMI) has defined myopia as a spherical equivalent refraction of  $\leq -0.50$  D and high myopia as  $\leq -6.00$  D.<sup>1</sup> Myopia prevalence is increasing across the world,<sup>2</sup> including the UK, in both children<sup>3,4</sup> and adults.<sup>5</sup> For children under the age of 17

WHAT IS ALREADY KNOWN ON THIS TOPIC

➔ Several licensed myopia management interventions are available in the UK, but the prescribed rate is lower than expected. Peer-reviewed research has attempted to understand why uptake is limited; however, data specific to the UK are limited.

WHAT THIS STUDY ADDS

➔ This study explores the attitudes and behaviours of UK primary and secondary eyecare practitioners towards myopia and myopia management. The study identifies several barriers to myopia management, appearing at various levels of eyecare delivery.

HOW THIS STUDY MIGHT AFFECT RESEARCH, PRACTICE OR POLICY

➔ This study reveals several current barriers limiting the implementation and uptake of myopia management in the UK. Organisations in eyecare service delivery can use this information to reduce these limitations and improve accessibility to the UK public. Those in optical industry and ophthalmic education can use this information to improve material aimed at practitioners' communication and clinical decision-making in relation to myopia management.

years in the UK, the proportion of myopic prescriptions increased from 24% in 2009 to 32% in 2016–2017, with faster myopic progression at younger ages.<sup>4</sup> Many myopia management interventions are now available, aimed at reducing the extent and speed of myopia progression.<sup>6</sup> These include optical interventions, such as specialist contact lenses and spectacles, as well as non-optical treatments, such as atropine and repeated low-level red light therapy. Many of these options are available through prescribing eyecare practitioners (ECPs), either as a licensed treatment or 'off-label'.

Myopia management prescribing appears to be on an upward trend globally. Efron et al<sup>7</sup> analysed contact lens fitting data and reported a global increase in the proportion of fits dedicated to myopia management in
