

PATIENTS AND METHODS:

For the purpose of achieving the aims, a quasi-experimental design has been used throughout the present study during the period from 15th of Jan 2007 to the 15th of Aug 2007.

The studied population included 80 patients with ischemic heart disease referred consecutively to the Holter ECG out patient clinic in Al-Kadhimia Teaching Hospital. These patients were chosen according to the following criteria:

- a- The patients were diagnosed as having a definite ischemic heart disease.
- b- Their chest pain lasted less than three months may be due to we hypothesized that Type A behavior pattern has been associated with the onset of myocardial ischemia, so too, though independently, has the presence of stressful life events in the period preceding illness.
- c- Informed consent was obtained from the legal guardians in all cases.

Six patients refused to participate and 4 patients did not complete Waik's scale were excluded from the study. Thus complete data were collected on 80 patients.

content validity of the questionnaire was determined through a panel of (10) experts in Al-Kadhimia Teaching Hospital and Ibn -Al-Bitar Hospital.

Internal consistency reliability was employed for the determination of the questionnaire's reliability. Alpha correlation coefficient was computed and indicated that $r=0.95$ which was adequately reliable.

Ambulatory monitoring of twenty four hour period a day was performed using a modified inferior lead and a personal lead corresponding to the maximum ST depression with daily life activity. Quick prep electrodes and Oxford recording II recorders were used. The patients were encouraged to return to normal active life style and complete extensive diaries to record the severity and activity of their typical attacks of palpitation or chest pain. They were also encouraged to write in the diary any other activities such as walking, working, eating and the times they went to bed. In addition, an analysis of the tapes was performed on the Oxford system modeltg II analyzer.

An episode of transient ST segment depression was defined as horizontal ST -depression of at least 0.1 mV measured 0.05 second after J point during daily life, compared to the resting ST-segment.

Waik's scale⁽²⁾ for the assessment of personality behaviour pattern was employed on the patients. The scale is composed of 72 items on the following fields:

I	Expression of anger	16 items
II	Competition and Ambition	15 items
III	Need to control	13 items
IV	Impulsiveness	11 items
V	Hypochy	10 items
VI	Aggressiveness	7 items

The persons who scored more than 36 were regarded as Type A personality, where as persons who scored less than 36 were regarded as Type B personality (Appendix I).

Statistical Analysis

Mean- Standard deviation and T-test value were computed to estimate the differences between the two types of personality (Type A& Type B).

Chi- square test and Kolmogorov- Smirnov test used two samples to determine the significant difference between the findings of Holter about personality (Type A & Type B).

Kolmogorov- Smirnov test was considered the most appropriate non -parametric test for the purpose of the project study and it was interchangeably used with Chi-square in cases where the frequencies in each cell in the rows or the columns had less than five frequencies.
