

Major Personality Theories

Theory	Key Proponents	Assumptions	View of Personality	Assessment Methods
Psychoanalytic	Sigmund Freud	Emotional disorders result from unconscious dynamics, such as unresolved sexual and other childhood conflicts, and fixations at various developmental stages. Defense mechanisms fend off anxiety.	Personality consists of pleasure-seeking impulses (the id), a reality-oriented executive (the ego), and an internalized set of ideals (the superego).	Free association Dream analysis Projective tests
Psychodynamic	Alfred Adler Karen Horney Carl Jung	The unconscious and conscious minds interact. Childhood experiences and defense mechanisms are important.	The dynamic interplay of conscious and unconscious motives and conflicts shape our personality.	Projective tests Therapy sessions
Humanistic	Carl Rogers Abraham Maslow	Rather than examining the struggles of sick people, it's better to focus on the ways healthy people strive for self-realization.	If our basic human needs are met, people will strive toward self-actualization. In a climate of unconditional positive regard, we can develop self-awareness and a more realistic and positive self-concept.	Questionnaires Therapy sessions
Trait	Gordon Allport Hans Eysenck McCrae & Costa	We have certain stable and enduring characteristics, influenced by genetic predispositions.	Scientific study of traits has isolated important dimensions of personality, such as the Big Five traits (OCEAN)	Personality inventories
Social-Cognitive	Albert Bandura			Our behavior in one situation is best
