Introduction

Recruiting is an important stage of the work with personnel, including calculation of staff requirements, model building of workplaces, professional recruitment and formation of the reserve. The essential element of the hiring can be called an adequate definition of the employer's needs. Documented basis for the development of the requirements is job description or profессиogram. They contain a number of employees' qualifications and skills required for the achievement of the goals set by the company and the terms of the employment for this or that position.

Staff Recruitment

There are two sources of recruitment: internal, due to the employees of the organization, and external due to the resources of the external environment. External sources are the most common, as the company's resources are limited, and even if the substitution for the vacant position can be found within the corporation, his previous position becomes vacant and company needs to find the person to take it. External sources can be divided into two classes: cheap and expensive (Heather 37).

Low-cost sources include, for example, state employment agencies, contacts with universities. High-priced sources include, for example, recruitment agencies, publications in mass media, etc. Besides, there are external sources of potential job candidates, the use of which is free to the organization. First of all, there are different free Internet portals devoted to the publication of vacancies and resumes of applicants.

The company also may receive resumes from applicants themselves conducting an independent job search without recourse to intermediaries. Even under conditions of high unemployment, it is rather difficult to find a highly qualified expert, and companies resort to expensive sources of recruitment (Honkaniemi, Tolvanen, and Feldt 377).
