

Wordsworth Poetic Process

Wordsworth defines poetry as "the spontaneous overflow of powerful feelings" and its origin is in "emotion recollected in tranquility." At the first glance, the two contentions may seem contradictory. Because, spontaneity is a forward process while recollection is a backward process. Therefore, how the spontaneous poetry is originated from recollected emotion is a question.

There are four stages in the process of poetic creation. These are observation, recollection, contemplation, composition.

Observation:

First, comes the phase where observation or perception of some event/character/object plays its part. The observed incident sets up powerful emotions in the sensible mind of the poet.

Recollection:

Next, comes the contemplation and speculation phase in which the emotion associated with a particular event are recollected in the mind of the poet. Memory in this stage plays an important role by bringing out what has been lying in the subconscious for a long period of time.

Filtering:

The third phase comprises the filtering process of the recollected emotion and feelings. In this process, the poet re-evaluates his emotions and removes the non-essential and vulgar elements. Poet then gives his experience a communicable form, which can be comprehended by all men.

COMPOSITION:

Composition is the fourth stage when the actual composition begins. The poet seeks to convey his emotions through print and turns into a communicator. In the words of Wordsworth he becomes a man speaking to men. What is important to him is not just expressing his joy but sharing it with his readers.

Thus at the moment of creation, the tranquility is replaced by spontaneous emotional excitement of powerful feelings.
