

Samples of Romano-British pottery were taken at four sites in the United Kingdom. A chemical analysis of the pottery was performed to measure the percentage of five metal oxides present in each sample. The purpose of the analysis was to determine if different sites produced pottery with different chemical compositions. Since we have five different measures of chemical composition, we should perform a multivariate analysis of variance (MANOVA) analysis to determine if there is a significant difference between sites considering all five variables simultaneously. The dependent variables (Y-variables) for the MANOVA are the five chemical variables; the predictor variable (X-variable) is 'Site'.
