Simulating Humans Norman I. Badler, Cary B. Phillips, Bonnie Lynn Webber, 1993-06-17 During the past decade high performance computer graphics have found application in an exciting and expanding range of new domains Among the most dramatic developments has been the incorporation of real time interactive manipulation and display for human figures Though actively pursued by several research groups the problem of providing a synthetic or surrogate human for engineers and designers already familiar with computer aided design techniques was most comprehensively solved by Norman Badler's computer graphics laboratory at the University of Pennsylvania The breadth of that effort as well as the details of its methodology and software environment are presented in this volume The book is intended for human factors engineers interested in understanding how a computer graphics surrogate human can augment their analyses of designed environments It will also inform design engineers of the state of the art in human figure modeling and hence of the human centered design central to the emergent concept of concurrent engineering In fulfilling these goals the book additionally documents for the entire computer graphics community a major research effort in the interactive control of articulated human figures in virtual human simulation has seen a dramatic rise in recent years with widespread applicability in games visual effects education and urban simulations Going forward the problems we face are three fold First a unified framework for efficiently simulating functional purposeful autonomous virtual humans is yet to be realized Second it is particularly challenging to evaluate massive simulations of autonomous agents Third there exists no appropriate interface to allow end users to author complex interactions between autonomous actors that populate the simulated environment This book addresses the aforementioned challenges and presents a general framework for authoring animating and evaluating autonomous virtual human simulations

The Simulated People Post Human Extinction Geoff Alexander,2012-12-07 Are we living in a simulation unwittingly How could we know It may sound absurd but humans have had computers for less than one hundred years and in that time their power and capabilities have increased at an exponential rate What are computers going to be capable of in five million years Simulations containing conscious independent beings could be created for research purposes or otherwise Philosophers have argued that it is more likely than not that the earth that we know is a simulation This fictional book presents the story of a man born within a simulation destined for something greater than the boundaries of his reality would ordinarily permit The simulation exists millions of years after the extinction of humanity and the circumstances surrounding its existence are most unusual and likely to defy expectations Little more can be said without spoiling one of the strangest plot twists ever likely to be encountered This bizarre 18 000 word philosophy science fiction hybrid is unconventionally written fast paced dark funny and contains mind blowing creativity It will keep you thinking long after reading
