

their way through innumerable earlier drafts of the manuscript and tried out the ideas on their own favorite policy arenas. We learned as much or more from them than they did from us. Each of us owes thanks to long-ago mentors who taught us much of what we know about pluralism, policy sciences, and public choice including Elinor Ostrom, LeRoy Rieselbach, and Ronald Weber at Indiana University; and Aaron Wildavsky, who generously advised his former Oberlin undergraduates throughout his life.

We are grateful to M. A. "Peg" Bortner for having read the entire manuscript and offering many useful suggestions, especially on how critical theory applies to public policy. And we want to thank the several scholars who attended the Udall Center Conference in 1994 on citizenship and public policy and offered very useful comments on earlier versions of parts of the book, especially Deborah Stone, Michael Lipsky, Marc Landy, Richard Vaeleley, and Steven Rathgeb Smith. We appreciate the continued encouragement and support of Dan Mazmanian and the very early encouragement received from Aaron Wildavsky. Elaine Sharp and John Mollenkopf made very insightful comments that made this a better book than it otherwise would have been.

Helen wishes to acknowledge the help of the staff at the Udall Center for Studies in Public Policy at the University of Arizona. Most of this book was written while she was Udall Center director. She appreciates the support and patience of family members, particularly her husband David Laird. Merrill Ingram provided many insights about science and public policy. Emlyn, Maia, and Seth contributed a sense of balance and reasons for joy.

Anne wants to acknowledge a lifelong debt to her parents, Bert and Margaret Larason, who taught her the basics about American democracy. She appreciates the many hours of discussion prompted by her father, an Oklahoma legislator uniformly admired for his leadership and integrity, and is deeply grateful to her mother, whose compassion, empathy, and fairness exemplify the finest features of democratic citizenship.
