

Rhetoric as Argument as Emergence Love

Narrative

"Even if we imagine that we are learning what can be known 'out there,' some truths that are fixed and forever, we are after all creating our narratives 'in here,' ourselves always agents for what can be known. We are always, as the rhetorician might say, inventing the narratives that are our lives."

we compose
ourselves

Argument

"Argument, then, is not something we make outside ourselves; argument is what we are. Each of us is an argument. We always live in, through, around, over, and under argument. All the choices we've made, accidentally or on purpose, in creating our histories/narrative have also made us arguments, or [...] sets of conflicting arguments."

we constitute arguments

The Glories of Heaven

"Where arguments entail identity, the presentation of 'a statement of how the opponent's position would benefit if he were to adopt elements of the writer's position' [as in Rogerian rhetoric] is about as efficacious as storming Hell with a bucket of water or trying to hide the glories of Heaven with a torn curtain."

we confront
others

we can have no guarantees

Going it Alone

"the arguer must plunge on alone, with no assurance of welcome from the other, with no assurance whatever of unconditional positive regard from the other [...] the arguer must, with no assurance, go out, inviting the other to enter a world that the arguer tries to make commodious, inviting the other to emerge as well, but with no assurance of kind or even thoughtful response."

Love

"Rhetoric is love, and it must speak a commodious language, creating a world full of space and time that will hold our diversities. Most failures of communication result from some willful or inadvertent but unloving violation of the space and time we and others live in, and most of our speaking is tribal talk. But there is more to us than that. We can learn to speak a commodious language, and we can learn to hear a commodious language."

we could love, first
