

Neurologic Examination of the Child

■ For toddlers,

- Best approached by seating the child in the parent's lap, and talking to the child
- Observe first the youngster, and defer touching him or her until some degree of rapport has been established
- Offering a small, interesting toy may bridge the gap
- Be patient and wait for the child to make the first move
- Once frightened, most toddlers are difficult to reassure and are lost for the remainder of the examination
