

Chapter 3: Biology & Neuroscience

3.1 Introduction: The Smart Conduit

- Your nervous system is the main interpreter of both the events in your body and those in the outer world. Your brain and spinal cord are the ultimate problem solvers that send and receive information to and from all areas of your body, and your nervous system is a maze of complex cellular networks that relay and process information.
- This integrated set of networks is composed of specialized cells called neurons (cells that transmit electrical impulses) and glial cells that provide support functions.
- Glial cells: Several different kinds of helper cells that assist neurons in their role as the brain's communicators and provide structural support.
- Neural: Anything related to nervous system structure or function.

3.2 Cells of the Nervous System

- There are two main types of cells in the nervous system. Neurons act as the main communicators. The second type of cell are called glia; they perform numerous support functions in the nervous system.

3.2.1 Neurons

- Neuron: Cells that communicate within the brain and with the body to form thoughts and actions. These cells code information as electrical signals, and also release chemicals that influence other neurons/organs/body parts.
- Neurons communicate with each other through chemical messages that alter the electrical activity of other neurons

3.2.1.1 Dendrites Receive Messages

- Dendrites are extensions of the membrane of the cell body and they receive chemical messages from many other neurons
- the chemical signal (called a neurotransmitter) influences action in the neuron. It can tell the neuron to "activate" (excitation) or "quiet down" (inhibition)
