Growing Mathematical Minds is the documentation of an innovative bi directional process of connecting research and practice in early childhood mathematics. The book translates research on early mathematics from developmental psychology into terms that are meaningful to teachers and readily applicable in early childhood classrooms. It documents teacher responses and conveys their thoughts and questions back to representative researchers who reply in turn. In so doing this highly useful book creates a conversation in which researchers and teachers each bring their expertise to bear. Their communication about these topics, informed by the thinking, commitment, and experience of both groups, helps us better understand how developmental psychology can improve math teaching and how math teaching can in turn inform developmental science. The book bridges the gap between research and practice, helping teachers to adopt evidence-based practices and apply cutting-edge research findings, and prompting developmental researchers to consider their work within the framework of practice. Growing Mathematical Minds identifies and elucidates research with profound implications for teaching children from three to eight years so they develop foundational math knowledge and skills, positive attitudes toward math, and basic abilities to think mathematically.

Winning at Math Paul D. Nolting, 2002. Every student must pass math courses to graduate. Doing well in math can both increase your career choices and allow you to graduate. Winning at Math will help you improve your math grades quickly and easily. The format of Winning at Math has been revised to make it easier to read, and it contains much more proven math study skills techniques. The chapter on test anxiety has been expanded to assist students with math anxiety, not just test anxiety. From publisher's description.

Math Attack Marilyn Curtain-Phillips, 1999-01      Measuring the Effect of Anxiety Reduction Techniques on Math Anxiety Levels in Students Enrolled in an HBCU College Marie Mikael Husni, 2006. The purpose of this quasi-experimental study was to determine whether the use of anxiety reduction and mathematics study skills techniques incorporated in a Basic Math course would lower students' math anxiety and increase achievement in African American students enrolled in a Historically Black College. This study was limited to only African American students enrolled in two sections of Basic Math at Rust College in Holly Springs, Mississippi: one control class (33 students) and one treatment class (33 students). One professor, the researcher, taught the same lectures and used traditional methods of teaching in both classes. In the treatment class, the teacher used anxiety reduction and math study skills techniques such as collaborative learning, journal writing, learning activities, relaxation instructions, and test-taking skills over an eight-week period. Identical math content was covered in both sections Achievement was measured by the Rust College Placement Exam and mathematics anxiety was measured by administering the Math Anxiety Rating Scale after each class test The obtained results indicated a significant reduction in anxiety  $p < .000$  and a significant increase in achievement  $p < .000$  for the treatment group Additionally a significant difference in gender was indicated for anxiety  $p < .019$  but not for achievement  $p < .779$  for the treatment group

Proceedings On Responsive & Resilient Quality Education Dr. Rosamma Philip, Strategies for Reducing Math Anxiety. Information Capsule Christie Blazer, 2011 Approximately 93 percent of Americans indicate that they experience some level of math anxiety Math anxiety is defined as negative emotions that interfere with the solving of mathematical problems Studies have found that some students who perform poorly on math assessments actually have a full understanding of the concepts being tested however their anxiety interferes with their ability to solve mathematical problems Researchers believe that implementation of strategies to prevent or reduce math anxiety will improve the math achievement of many students This Information Capsule summarizes strategies that teachers parents and students can use to prevent or reduce math anxiety

Davis, 1996 Implementing Teaching Strategies to Reduce Math Anxiety Amanda Evola, 2017 Dissertation Abstracts International, 1995 Effects of Intervention on Reduction of Math Anxiety of Secondary School Students Mary A. Martin, 2018 This study sought to identify whether targeted interventions produce a statistically significant reduction in student math anxiety which methods are most effective in reducing student math anxiety and whether effective methods differ according to academic achievement level The interventions applied consisting of curricular design classroom practices and instructor behaviors were as follows 1 use of unit outlines 2 incorporating review work 3 collaborative groupwork 4 perceived instructor empathy 5 concepts explained in various ways 6 out of class 1 1 aid 7 content made relevant 8 positive reinforcement from instructor peers The research was performed in an Algebra 1 classroom of a public high school containing 64 students over the course of 1 semester 18 weeks A presurvey and postsurvey measured students math anxiety levels while all 8 interventions were applied continuously throughout the semester Pre and post anxiety levels semester grades and supplementary postsurvey questions regarding students opinions on intervention effectiveness produced the statistically significant result that targeted interventions do reduce math anxiety

However when grouped according to achievement level this result only holds for those students defined by high academic achievement Overall the most effective intervention methods were a caring instructor an encouraging learning environment and mixing in review work throughout the semester Keywords math anxiety intervention academic achievement remediation
