CONTEXT Family and intimate partner violence occurs commonly in the U S and causes important health problems Although the clinician s role in identification and intervention is considered a professional and legal responsibility the effectiveness of these efforts is unclear

OBJECTIVE To examine evidence on the performance of screening procedures and interventions in the primary care setting in reducing harm from family and intimate partner violence for children women and elderly adults

DATA SOURCES MEDLINE r PsycINFO CINAHL Health Psychosocial Instruments ERIC AARP Ageline and the Cochrane Controlled Trials Register reference lists of systematic reviews and experts

STUDY SELECTION Included studies had English language abstracts were applicable to U S clinical practice described abuse and neglect in women children or elderly adults were conducted in or linked to primary care obstetrics gynecology or emergency department settings and included a clinician in the process of assessment or intervention

DATA EXTRACTION We extracted selected information about study design patient samples and settings methods of assessment or intervention and clinical endpoints and applied a set of criteria to evaluate study quality

DATA SYNTHESIS No studies directly addressed the effectiveness of screening in a healthcare setting in reducing harm or described the adverse effects of screening and interventions All instruments designed to screen for child abuse and neglect were directed to parents particularly pregnant women These had fairly high sensitivity but low specificity Several brief instruments designed to identify women with intimate partner violence compared well to longer previously validated instruments We found few studies of screening for elder abuse and neglect A randomized controlled trial with 15 years follow up indicated that nurse home visits during pregnancy and for 2 years postpartum for low income women improved abuse and neglect outcomes for children Studies of interventions for children of other ages women who are not pregnant and elderly adults are lacking CONCLUSIONS Screening and interventions for child abuse are directed to parents during prenatal and postpartum periods Several brief screening instruments have been tested for women but interventions are lacking Few instruments and no interventions were identified for elderly adults Rudolph's Pediatrics, 22nd Edition Colin D.
