Volunteering Is Its Own Reward

- 1 In his 1961 inaugural address, John F. Kennedy famously declared, "Ask not what your country can do for you—ask what you can do for your country." With his introduction of the Peace Corps later that year, President Kennedy initiated an era of service and volunteerism that remains as active as ever.
- 2 Today, dedicated Americans still serve communities throughout the world as Peace Corps volunteers. What's more, over the decades new government-sponsored programs have emerged that carry on and expand the mission to serve. AmeriCorps and Senior Corps, for example, have touched the lives of millions by engaging youth and senior citizens alike much closer to home, in their own communities.
- 3 These large-scale government-sponsored programs typically require a significant time commitment, but there are also plenty of other opportunities for busy people who still want to do their part. Charities and civic organizations allow time-strapped volunteers to help out where they are needed. Participants can deliver meals to seniors, spend time with dogs in animal shelters, and visit people in hospitals. They can even beautify public parks.
- 4 According to the Corporation for National and Community Service's research report Volunteer Growth in America, volunteerism is on the rise. For people over age 65, the rate has increased 64 percent since 1974. Perhaps even more surprisingly, the rate for adults aged 45–64 has increased almost 30 percent.
- 5 This dramatic increase, however, raises an interesting question. At the risk of sounding cynical, what is in it for the volunteers?
- 6 For ambitious youth who want to pad their résumés with good deeds, the answer may seem obvious. The same could be said for retirees with plenty of time on their hands. But what about busy adults with families and full-time jobs?
