

Rheumatic Diseases

Rheumatoid arthritis (chronic polyarthritis)
 This is a chronic autoimmune disease that affects the joints. It is characterized by inflammation of the synovial membrane, which leads to the formation of pannus, a thick layer of tissue that can erode the underlying bone and cartilage. The disease is most common in the hands and wrists, but can affect any joint. It is a long-term condition that requires ongoing treatment to manage symptoms and prevent joint damage.

Joint inflammation accompanying psoriasis
 This condition, known as psoriatic arthritis, is associated with the autoimmune disease psoriasis. It causes inflammation in the joints, often leading to swelling, pain, and stiffness. Unlike rheumatoid arthritis, it can affect the distal interphalangeal joints (the joints at the ends of the fingers and toes). Treatment typically involves anti-inflammatory medications and disease-modifying antirheumatic drugs (DMARDs).

Viewed in the late stage of chronic polyarthritis, the distal interphalangeal joint exhibits the nodular joint of the finger with destroyed joint surfaces.

Inflammation of the ear and arthralgia in the ear nodules.

Redness and swelling of the distal interphalangeal joint of the toe.

The basal joint of the big toe is frequently affected by acute inflammation.

Ankylosing spondylitis
 This is a chronic inflammatory disease that primarily affects the spine and sacroiliac joints. It is characterized by inflammation of the intervertebral discs and the ligaments that connect the vertebrae. Over time, this can lead to the fusion of the vertebrae, resulting in a rigid spine. The disease is more common in men and is associated with the HLA-B27 gene.

Typical posture after many years of suffering from ankylosing spondylitis. The mobility of the spine is seriously impaired or even completely abolished.

Definition
 Ankylosing spondylitis is a chronic inflammatory disease of the spine and sacroiliac joints. It is characterized by inflammation of the intervertebral discs and the ligaments that connect the vertebrae. Over time, this can lead to the fusion of the vertebrae, resulting in a rigid spine. The disease is more common in men and is associated with the HLA-B27 gene.

- Inflammation of the intervertebral discs and the ligaments that connect the vertebrae.
- Pain and stiffness in the spine, particularly in the lower back and neck.
- Swelling of the joints, particularly the sacroiliac joints.
- Fusion of the vertebrae, resulting in a rigid spine.
- Association with the HLA-B27 gene.
- Treatment with anti-inflammatory medications and disease-modifying antirheumatic drugs (DMARDs).
- Physical therapy and exercise to maintain flexibility.
- Smoking cessation, as smoking is associated with the disease.

Association with HLA-B27 gene
 The HLA-B27 gene is a genetic marker that is associated with ankylosing spondylitis. It is found in approximately 90% of patients with the disease. However, it is also found in about 8% of the general population. The presence of the HLA-B27 gene does not guarantee that a person will develop the disease, but it does increase the risk.

Psoriatic arthritis with rheumatoid nodules
 This is a form of psoriatic arthritis that is characterized by the presence of rheumatoid nodules. These are small, firm, painless lumps that are typically found on the fingers and toes. They are made of a thick, fibrous material that can erode the underlying bone and cartilage. The disease is more common in people with psoriasis and is associated with the HLA-B27 gene.

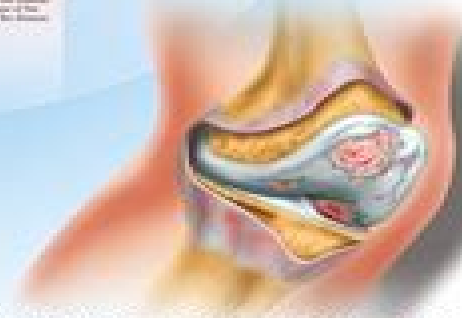

Working with ankylosing spondylitis, the grade of loss of sitting posture from top to bottom is illustrated.

Soft tissue rheumatism
 This is a group of conditions that affect the soft tissues of the body, including the tendons, ligaments, and bursae. It is characterized by inflammation and pain in these areas. The conditions are often associated with autoimmune diseases and can be treated with anti-inflammatory medications and physical therapy.

Tender points in rheumatism

Regenerative joint disease (osteoarthritis)
 This is a degenerative joint disease that is characterized by the breakdown of the articular cartilage that covers the ends of the bones in a joint. It is the most common form of arthritis and is associated with age, obesity, and joint injury. The disease leads to pain, stiffness, and a loss of joint function. Treatment typically involves pain relievers, physical therapy, and in severe cases, joint replacement surgery.

Knee joint with signs of arthritis. The damage to the joint surface of the femur can be clearly seen. The joint space is narrowed and the thin layer of synovial tissue developed on the edges of the bone ("flipping").

Joint inflammation in children and adolescents (juvenile arthritis)
 This is a group of autoimmune diseases that affect the joints in children and adolescents. It is characterized by inflammation of the joints, which can lead to pain, swelling, and stiffness. The disease is more common in girls than boys and is associated with the HLA-B27 gene. Treatment typically involves anti-inflammatory medications and disease-modifying antirheumatic drugs (DMARDs).

Inflammatory diseases of the connective tissue
 This is a group of autoimmune diseases that affect the connective tissue of the body. It is characterized by inflammation of the connective tissue, which can lead to pain, swelling, and stiffness. The diseases are more common in women and are associated with the HLA-B27 gene. Treatment typically involves anti-inflammatory medications and disease-modifying antirheumatic drugs (DMARDs).

Infectious joint inflammation
 This is a group of conditions that are caused by an infection in the joint. It is characterized by inflammation of the joint, which can lead to pain, swelling, and stiffness. The infections are typically caused by bacteria, viruses, or fungi. Treatment typically involves antibiotics, antiviral medications, or antifungal medications.
