

PURPOSE

The Learning for Influence methodology¹ is for organizations working in development who want to better understand and document how they influence policy and practice.

What does impact or value and how you measure your work? What does success mean for your organization? How do you measure change?

The methodology will help answer these questions. It will help you gain a deeper understanding of the policy change processes that you are engaging in, and it will help you understand how to influence them better in the future.

This includes organizations that are active to create change within systems, such as education, health, agriculture, enterprises, and organizations working for sustainable development at all levels. The methodology aims to help these organizations better understand the change processes that they contribute to, as well as how they exchange as individuals.

The methodology will help you document your knowledge of the change processes you are trying to influence by helping you articulate the values that inform how you work and the context that you work in, and creating narratives that show how your organization has impact. This methodology also emphasizes the importance of the perspectives of people working within organizations to achieve change, and on the stories that they can tell together about their experience. The emphasis puts people at the forefront of the impact happens over time.

The methodology is designed to be used in a variety of ways, with the aim of supporting organizations to better understand and document their impact.

The methodology was developed and developed with a community of learning for grassroots and systems organizations. It was developed through a series of workshops, research, and learning (MEL) activities, learning for influence was developed with MEL approaches such as outcome mapping, outcome harvesting, Most Significant Changes and second stories.

The methodology focuses on four dimensions that drive how influencing policy and practice happens: context, organizational approaches, examples from practice, and stories of impact. The methodology aims to generate multiple perspectives within an organization and can also be used for collaboration between learning across a network of organizations working together. Therefore, the methodology should involve a variety of individuals within organizations working to influence policy and practice.
