

Fawry's organizational structure combines elements of both meritocracy and functional hierarchy. The company is known for its focus on innovation, agility, and employee development, which are key aspects of meritocracy. Fawry's culture emphasizes collaboration, creativity, and ownership of work, which are also aspects of meritocracy. At the same time, Fawry is a technology company and likely has functional departments such as engineering, product development, sales, marketing, customer service, and finance. Each department would have its own manager or supervisor responsible for overseeing the work of employees within that department, which is characteristic of the functional hierarchy structure.

Fawry's organizational structure is likely a combination of meritocracy and functional hierarchy, with a focus on promoting innovation and employee development while maintaining functional departments that work together to achieve the company's goals.

Fawry's organizational structure and level of control over its success or failure cannot be easily classified as either omnipotent or symbolic. Both internal and external factors play a role in determining the company's performance, and Fawry likely has a complex organizational structure that combines elements of both meritocracy and functional hierarchy. However, if we were to consider Fawry's external environment and the industry it operates in, it is more likely that the company has a symbolic view of its power and control. The digital payments industry in Egypt is subject to government regulations and is highly competitive, with many players vying for market share. As such, Fawry's success or failure is influenced by external factors beyond its control, such as changes in government regulations or shifts in consumer behavior.
