SECOND SERIES PREFACE I am sorry not to have been able to persuade my old friend George Radford who wrote the paper on Falstaff in the former volume to contribute anything to the second series of Obiter Dicta In order to enjoy the pleasure of reading your own books over and over again it is essential that they should be written either wholly or in part by somebody else Critics will probably be found ready to assert that this little book has no right to exist since it exhibits nothing worthy of the name of research being written by one who has never been inside the reading room of the British Museum Neither does it expound any theory save the unworthy one that literature ought to please nor does it so much as introduce any new name or forgotten author to the attention of what is facetiously called the reading public But I shall be satisfied with a mere de facto existence for the book if only it prove a little interesting to men and women who called upon to pursue somewhat too rigorously for their liking their daily duties are glad every now and again when their feet are on the fender and they are surrounded by such small luxuries as their theories of life will allow them to enjoy to be reminded of things they once knew more familiarly than now of books they once had by heart and of authors they must ever love The first two papers are here printed for the first time the others have been so treated before and now reappear pulled about a little with the kind permission of the proper parties We are delighted to publish this classic book as part of our extensive Classic Library collection Many of the books in our collection have been out of print for decades and therefore have not been accessible to the general public The aim of our publishing program is to facilitate rapid access to this vast reservoir of literature and our view is that this is a significant literary work which deserves to be brought back into print after many decades The contents of the vast majority of titles in the Classic Library have been scanned from the original works To ensure a high quality product each title has been meticulously hand curated by our staff Our philosophy has been guided by a desire to provide the reader with a book that is as close as possible to ownership of the original work We hope that you will enjoy this wonderful classic work and that for you it becomes an enriching experience Obiter Dicta Second Series Augustine
