

BOOK OF LOVE

OBJECT-CHOICE (ALL YOU NEED IS LOVE . . .): ON MATING STRATEGIES & A FRAGMENT OF A FREUD BIOGRAPHY, BY KLAUS THEWELEIT, TRANS. MALCOLM GREEN, LONDON: VERSO, 1994. 312 PP. $17.95.

THE MESSAGE AND TONE of Klaus Theweleit's engrossing new book can be gathered from a line concluding his second chapter, "Lexicon of Love": "The unalloyed love that any old male capitalist has for himself is one of the current capital crimes in the face of history." In Object-choice (All you need is love . . .), Theweleit suggests that male behavior in "love" is organized to protect and expand the domain of a fundamental masculine "self-love." He hardly needs to argue this point in detail, as it is so familiar; rather, he explores the implications of male "self-love" for people's choice of partners in specific sexual and social institutions, especially long-term "relationships" and marriage.

According to Theweleit, a man's object-choice consists largely in identifying, wooing, using, and abandoning female partners who serve his interests and technical needs as a male "producer" in a mostly male world of competition and creation. Women working in the male marketplace (for example, as craftswomen, intellectuals, or artists) will be drawn into the role of what he calls "medial women" for a male authority, or authority wanna-be, by being asked to edit his movies, type his manuscripts, and so forth. Concretely, female object-choice consists in large measure in identifying with and—by leaning with the man who guarantees it—successfully occupying this role of subordinate coproducer or, in a slight permutation, "sister-daughter" assisting in the birth of a male institution or male creation. These are familiar constellations, and Theweleit's attention to them is not novel. Nonetheless, Object-choice offers a distinctive and sometimes fresh approach.

In general, it is a high-spirited book—fun to read, politically and artistically astute, topical, and richly expressive of the author's personality. Oddly enough, Theweleit reserves his own loving marriage, as he portrays it, from the destructive male narcissism he takes as his principal target. This kind of self-indulgence could have used an editor. Indeed, the book as a whole would have benefited from a more systematic and less religiously sensitive approach.

Theweleit proposes a number of riffs on a reading of Freud's 1914 essay "On Narcissism: An Introduction." This text suggests that a man will love, that is, intensely idealize and attach himself to, "(a) what he himself is, (b) what he himself was, (c) what he himself would like to be, [and] (d) someone who was once part of himself." Theweleit assumes that we have a good (not to say clichéd) idea of the relation between (a) and (c): a man is a "male"—to some degree anxious and frustrated—who would like to be a Male (a King). Theweleit is surely right, however, that the relations between positions (b) and (d) in Freud's scheme need redefining.

It is tempting to see object-choice simply as a repetition of the child's earliest relations with its parents; the latest love-partner is someone who positions the lover as he was when he was a child and evokes the parent(s) who originally fashioned him this way. But Theweleit would like to move away somewhat from this simplified Freudianism. Drawing on the American psychoanalyst Lloyd de Mause's work on "psycho-classes," Theweleit urges that "the transmission networks and fish-hooks of the sibling level play a more significant role in love-choices and marital forms for the majority of people here (i.e., in contemporary Germany and the United States) than the constellations in the Oedipal triangle, namely the mother-father-child level" (my italics). Oldest children, he believes, will be attracted to and will tend to attach with oldest children, middle children with middle, and younger with younger. Precisely because parents treat their firstborn in ways quite different from the way they treat their lastborn, children of different "psycho-classes" will have different erotic chemistries and will tend to bond with their birth-order peers—they will "smell" them out. (Theweleit is not afraid to approach the "transmission networks" of erotic object-choice in the terms Freud also toyed with—as telepathy or chemical signaling.)

Moreover, the dynamics of sibling relations in the late-19th- and 20th-century Western family will set the pattern for adult object-choice. Theweleit suggests, for example, that male "brothers"—"best friends" or comrades-in-arms—will trade their "sisters," providing comparatively accessible women for one another. The "sister" is the girl constantly in the background of a boy's friendships with his male peers, and one whose chastity, competence, and obedience will be guaranteed by his friends, whose virtue, intelligence, etc., are, in themselves, never questioned. And when "boy friendships" disintegrate or a man moves on to new spheres of competition and creation in the male world, the first "plaster-wife" (the sister of his best friend) will cease to interest him. He will locate a sequencer of such women as he advances through male institutions, hierarchies, and careers—a pattern in which Theweleit is especially interested.

In 20th-century cultural criticism, tremendous emphasis has been and probably will continue to be placed on Oedipal dynamics. More
