Commensalism and Conflict James D. Paterson, Janette Wallis, 2005 Piaget, Evolution, and Development Jonas Langer, Melanie Killen, 1998-06 This volume brings the current interest in primate cognition to bear on studies of cognitive development in humans with chapters from leading researchers in both areas For cognitive developmentalists and primatologists and comparative psychologists Evolution of Social Behaviour Patterns in Primates and Man Walter Garrison Runciman, John Maynard Smith, Robin Ian MacDonald Dunbar, 1996 The fourteen contributions testify to the increasing co operation which is bringing together biologists primatologists archaeologists psychologists linguists and anthropologists who share a common interest in the study of social and cultural behaviour from an evolutionary perspective The papers derived from a Royal Society British Academy meeting range in topic from cultural and social behaviour among non human primates through the interaction of cognitive development with social organization during the Upper Palaeolithic to behaviour including linguistic behaviour among modern humans This volume reflects the important recent developments in such areas as behavioural ecology evolutionary psychology and the origin and function of language Jahresbericht, 2000 Peacemaking among Primates Frans B. M. de Waal, 1990-09-01 Does biology condemn the human species to violence and war Previous studies of animal behavior incline us to answer yes but the message of this book is considerably more optimistic Without denying our heritage of aggressive behavior Frans de Waal describes powerful checks and balances in the makeup of our closest animal relatives and in so doing he shows that to humans making peace is as natural as making war In this meticulously researched and absorbing account we learn in detail how different types of simians cope with aggression and how they make peace after fights Chimpanzees for instance reconcile with a hug and a kiss whereas rhesus monkeys groom the fur of former adversaries By objectively examining the dynamics of primate social interactions de Waal makes a convincing case that confrontation should not be viewed as a barrier to sociality but rather as an unavoidable element upon which social relationships can be built and strengthened through reconciliation The author examines five different species chimpanzees rhesus monkeys stump tailed monkeys bonobos and humans and relates anecdotes culled from exhaustive observations that convey the intricacies and refinements of simian behavior Each species utilizes its own unique peacemaking strategies The bonobo for example is little known to science and even less to the general public but this rare ape maintains peace by means of sexual behavior divorced from reproductive functions sex occurs in all possible combinations and positions whenever social tensions need to be resolved Make love not war could be the bonobo slogan De Waal s demonstration of reconciliation in both monkeys and apes strongly supports his thesis that forgiveness and peacemaking are widespread among nonhuman primates an aspect of primate societies that should stimulate much needed work on human conflict resolution

Encyclopedia of Violence, Peace, & Conflict: A-F Lester R. Kurtz,2008 Provides timely and useful information about antagonism and reconciliation in all contexts of public and personal life An essential reference for students and scholars working in the field of peace and conflict resolution studies and for those seeking to explore alternatives to violence and share visions and strategies for social justice and social change

Primate Behavioral Ecology Karen B. Strier,2007 Primate Behavioral Ecology described as an engaging cutting edge exposition incorporates exciting new discoveries and the most up to date approaches in its introduction to the field and its applications of behavioral ecology to primate conservation One reviewer declares I can t imagine teaching a course on primate behavior or ecology without this text This unique comprehensive single authored text integrates the basics of evolutionary ecological and demographic perspectives with contemporary noninvasive molecular and hormonal techniques to understand how different primates behave and the significance of these insights for primate conservation Examples are drawn from the classic primate field studies and more recent studies on previously neglected species from across the primate order illustrating the vast behavioral variation that we now know exists and the gaps in our knowledge that future studies will fill

Human Biology Raymond Pearl,1995 Includes section Recent literature useful in the study of human biology

Sociality, Social Networks and Strategies of Conflict Management in Hominoid Primates Nerea Amezcua Valmala,2021 Sociality is a widespread behavioural strategy that has been selected for in many animal species including humans and other hominoid primates Although sociality is a widespread phenomenon the specific mechanisms and processes that may give rise to and maintain the structuring and cohesion of social groups remain poorly understood The primate order that includes humans is made of reputedly social species However although they tend to live in social groups the characteristics of their grouping units can be very variable both within and across species This means that the very same outcome group life may arise through a variety of processes that may be activated by different mechanisms In several studies in which this issue has been addressed researchers have found that regardless of a group's size individuals tend to cultivate relationships with just a few of their members those that belong to the same network This implies that social time is really a serious constraint on the chances that individuals have of maintaining membership in large networks It appears that individuals have a quota for social time and that the way they deal with this constraint can greatly vary from one individual to another and can also vary as a function of environmental factors

Primates in Perspective Christina J. Campbell, 2011 This volume contains forty seven original essays by seventy leading researchers offering an overview of all major areas of primatology Arranged in six sections the text begins with an introduction to primatology and a review of the natural history of the major taxonomic groups within the order Primates It goes on to cover methodologies and research design for both field and captive settings primate reproduction primate ecology and conservation and their roles in the daily lives of primates and such aspects of social behavior and intelligence as communication learning and cognition The volume ends with a concluding chapter by the editors that discuss the future of primatological research

International Journal of Primatology, 2006

The Nonhuman Primates Phyllis Dolhinow, Agustín Fuentes, 1999 An introductory textbook comprising 34 essays written expressly for the volume by specialists in various topics and species The first section surveys the species the taxonomy and their survival status the second samples aspects of primate behavior including the primate group the life span the

Primates; Studies in Adaptation and Variability Phyllis Dolhinow, 1968 A progress report that outlines the kinds of studies of primate behavior and variability that still need to be made Written by eminent authorities in the fields of anthropology psychology zoology and psychiatry the selections in this volume concern primate social behavior adaptation and variation

Neotropical Primates, 2000

The Social Regulation of Competition and Aggression in Animals M. Moynihan, 1998 An acute observer of animal behavior Martin H Moynihan uses a wide array of comparative studies to detail the diversity mechanics and evolutionary origins of the means by which animals keep their aggression in check He follows birds primates and cephalopods in their natural settings analyzing not only such simple behaviors as habituation and retreat but also more intricate interactions such as redirection attacks excluding other animals from opportunities leaving scent marks and engaging in dominance relationships Moynihan demonstrates that signaling is fundamental to the evolution of strategies for regulating aggression and he describes how divergent social signals can accomplish similar ends as well as the reverse how homologous signals can play different roles depending on the particular circumstances of each social confrontation He also explores the ecological factors that lie behind the geographical distribution of some signalling patterns

Motherhood in Human and Nonhuman Primates Christopher R. Pryce, Robert D. Martin, David Skuse, 1995 Within the disciplines of anthropology medicine psychology and zoology the primate mother infant relationship has been studied extensively in terms of either its evolution adaptive function causation disruption or consequences Between these disciplines however there has been only limited exchange of theory and evidence relating to the study of motherhood and this is true for human motherhood specifically and primate motherhood in general This situation needs rectifying because a clear and detailed understanding of the biosocial regulation of human motherhood is best achieved using a comparative and interdisciplinary approach Edited by two primatologists and a child psychiatrist this book contains the proceedings of a recent symposium where the theory and evidence relating to the biosocial regulation of motherhood were integrated across the primate order Seventeen contributors representing many of the world s leading groups engaged in research on primate mother infant behaviour present their very latest ideas experimental findings and theoretical interpretations The application of the evidence from studies of nonhuman primates to human maternal care and vice versa is discussed The major emphasis is on improved understanding of human motherhood including clarification of the unique aspects of its biosocial regulation The book should provide a major impetus for future research into primate motherhood at the interface of the natural social and clinical sciences BOOK JACKET Title Summary field provided by Blackwell North America Inc All Rights Reserved
