Urban Mortality Change in England and Germany, 1870-1913 Jörg Vögele,1998-01-01 In a careful and well written analysis Vögele focuses attention on the question of when towns ceased to be relatively unhealthy compared with rural areas with useful discussions of disease categories and issues concerning the different structuring of data in the British and German national contexts Although the focus is on urban health conditions and epidemic control these are related to a wide range of social factors The text has valuable comparable insights for example on urbanization and professionalization and provides a lucid exposition of some major theories concerning the social determinants of diseases With a sure grasp of mortality trends and associated socio economic processes Vögele presents a convincing picture from the early modern period of age specific mortality trends This is an important comparative historical study of mortality in which the author offers an impressive synthesis of complex data and issues concerning rapid urbanization and social conditions It will be of great interest to British and German historians as well as to those concerned with economic history demographic history and the history of medicine and it will be a pivotal reference work for those seeking to apply demographic expertise to the understanding of changing disease patterns

Learning from Other Countries: The Cross-National Dimension in Urban Policy Making I. Masser, Mrs Bernadette Williams, R. Williams, 2005-08-11 Looking at the lessons we can learn from international research in urban and regional planning this book explores the challenges in using cross country studies The contributors address how to approach researching planning in other countries and how to then diffuse the planning information Key topics include comparable urban data and how to use it working with international agencies methodological issues in cross country research translating theory into practice Case studies include researching new towns in France and Poland and problems doing empirical work in Eastern Europe
