Abstract: The National Digital Library of Theses and Dissertations and the NCL (National Central Library) Taiwan Periodical Literature database were used to analyze dissertations and journal articles on early childhood life education. The researcher explored the research themes of life education for young children aged 3 to 6 years in Taiwan and offered strategies for improving learning in early childhood life education. Eight categories of themes were examined. In addition, the curriculum development of learning in early childhood life education was identified: (1) life event core curriculum, (2) sympathy core curriculum, (3) example core curriculum, and (4) anima core curriculum. Several teaching approaches of learning in early childhood life education are proposed: (1) teaching through picture books, (2) learning through experience, (3) teaching through instructional media, (4) teaching through concept mapping, (5) teaching through stories, and (6) teaching through parent–teacher collaboration. Developing and implementing the strategies of learning in early childhood life education is crucial for cultivating psychological wellbeing in young children and improving the quality of Taiwan’s early childhood education system.

1. Introduction

1.1. Life Education in an Early Childhood Development to Cultivate Psychological Wellbeing in Young Children Aged 3 to 6 Years

Psychological wellbeing in young children includes both their mental health and emotional health. Good psychological wellbeing gives young children the best chance to develop into healthy adults who have the coping skills in place to deal with day-to-day life. Good mental health and emotional health help young children develop socially, emotionally, mentally, and physically. Furthermore, loving relationships are key to young children’s mental health and emotional health. Learning to manage feelings is important to mental health and emotional health [1,2].

Each child is different in terms of height, weight, body build, and developmental stage. Early childhood is a critical period for individual growth and development, with experiences in early childhood affecting an individual’s life situation in the future. The various cognitive processes of young children develop gradually throughout their various developmental stages. For example, critical thinking is a complex mental activity that develops relatively late during an individual’s mental development and is based on mental processes such as feeling, perception, and memory. Thinking skills develop along with cognitive processes during a child’s growth and learning [3–5]. Piaget described the different stages of cognitive development, noting that at each stage, children develop a new manner of functioning, thinking, and responding to their external environment [6,7].
