Reviewing Britains Defence:

Reviewing Britain's Presence East of Suez Maike Hausen, 2022-06-14 Maike Hausen presents a transnational multi perspective review of strategic and security discussions among the former British white settler colonies Australia Canada and New Zealand in the 1960s Focusing on the foreign policy debate surrounding the British decision to withdraw their military East of Suez from Southeast Asia she reviews extensive source material to examine the transformation of political diplomatic and strategic ties between Great Britain and Australia Canada and New Zealand By embedding the East of Suez discussion into a larger framework of long term postcolonial transformations and developments of the Cold War and decolonization the study traces how the British decision upset the traditional conduct of concerted foreign policy and led to notions of crisis and uncertainty as well as to reviews that would ultimately contribute to more independent national outlooks and policies

Reviewing Britain's Defence Ian Bellany, 1994 British defence policy since 1970 is studied using the device of distinguishing between stated operational and industrial levels of policy making In an ideal world these levels should be in line or if out of line should be so as a result of deliberate policy rather than inadvertence Failure to bring some of these levels of policy into line in spite of attempts to do so accounts for a variety of otherwise puzzling features of British defence policy consistently high defence budgets also the subject of a statistical annex even when compared to France a navy still virtually as large as the next two largest navies added together and the 90 per cent of all armaments for British forces consistently purchased from British industry at a time of rapidly diminishing British industrial competitiveness The intuitively important phenomenon of the defence review is placed in context as an act designed to resolve contradictions and inconsistencies between the different levels of policy
