Management of Complex Cardiovascular Problems Thach Nguyen, Dayi Hu, Shigeru Saito, Vijay Dave, Cindy L. Grines, 2001-12-11 Current trends predict that by the year 2020 cardiovascular disease CVD will be the most common cause of death in the history of the human species This century alone has seen the rise and recognition of CVD as a global problem affecting both Western and Eastern populations in ever increasing numbers While modern research methods have lead to great strides in understanding diagnosis treatment and decreasing its mortality CVD still remains a major medical social and economic problem In thirteen chapters this book identifies clearly the most common cardiovascular problems encountered at the bedside by the consultant cardiologist It then describes the possible different practical options in the management of these problems These strategies incorporate data from recent clinical trials with particular attention paid to specific subsets of patients who may or may not benefit from the suggested treatment The intelligent application of these treatment modalities tailored to a particular patient and maximized by the personal approach of the individual cardiologist consultant will hopefully bring about the long projected better outcome In addition to common medical management indications and practical suggestions for catheter based interventions endovascular pharmacologic manipulation and atrial and ventricular pacing or defibrillation are also addressed Clinical

cardiologists internists or family physicians as well as fellows and cardiovascular nurses will find this book a valuable evidence based medicine resource in the ongoing global battle against complex cardiovascular problems

Consultant's Approach to Complex Cardiovascular Problems Thach Nguyen, Dayi Hu, Shigeru Saito, Lim Yean Leng, Vijay Dave, 1999-12-23 In 13 chapters this book describes clearly the major diseases disorders likely to be faced by a consultant cardiologist as well as the most current treatment modalities available Information culled from a wide variety of clinical trials is carefully examined and related to common experience including the identification of various subsets of patients whose differing outcomes can be explained as a result of specific clinical characteristics This attention to detail is present not only in discussions of specific maladies and sequelae but also in the examination of management strategies Care is also taken to address the dual tasks of the consultant cardiologist how to bring a personal touch and happy ending to the cardiovascular problems of patients while at same time acknowledging the need for cardiac care to stay within budget lest the rising tide of CVD bankrupt the healthcare system
