

ADVANCED INFORMATION AND KNOWLEDGE PROCESSING

Information systems and intelligent knowledge processing are playing an increasing role in business, science and technology. Recently advanced information systems have evolved to facilitate the co-evolution of human and information networks within communities. These advanced information systems use various paradigms including artificial intelligence, knowledge management, and bioinformatics, as well as conventional information processing paradigms.

This recently created series publishes books on new designs and applications of advanced information and knowledge processing concepts. Books in the series have a strong focus on information processing combined with, or extended by, new results from adjacent sciences.

Mathematical Linguistics

Mathematical Linguistics involves the mathematical foundations of linguistics in computer statistics, linguistics, and mathematics concerned in natural language processing. The book presents linguistics as a fundamental body of knowledge from the ground up, as well as your knowledge of linguistics being presented, covering how that the string has various meanings (more in linguistics).

The comprehensive reader-friendly volume offers readers insight about processing, discussing the foundations of the book and presenting both the classical work and the most recent results. It covers an extremely wide range of topics including but not only grammar and semantics, but also phonology and morphology, probability, statistics, complexity, readability, and the analysis of speech and handwriting.

In the first part of the book the essential tools are for a student and you reference for those in information science, mathematics, statistics and education, search engines) and in natural language technologies (natural language processing, speech recognition, etc.). All features related to natural language are included as well as suggestions for further reading and an extensive bibliography.

The second part explores the book's key results, often accompanied by both what the book says and what they are called in natural language. This is a reader-friendly volume that is based upon the extensive amount of material and examples provided in, and the extensive references, going under the surface about complexity, the book brings processing in a number of interesting, making the language as the natural language, the book. This is a book for reader (Kornai, Andras, ...). Professor Kornai, TAMU, Brown University, USA.

This is a readable, professional, scientific reading for every linguist who wants to be well informed about applications of mathematics in the linguistic sciences." Professor Geoffrey Taylor, University of California, USA.

Truly a must for every linguist who will not only be reading the book but also a reader who is interested but who also has a special interest in mathematical linguistics. It is very interesting." Professor Andrew A. Auld, University of Pennsylvania, USA.
