Multiple calls to action have been and continue to be launched regarding the developing and practical use of advanced technology with high sensitivity and specificity. The author intends to address the reasons behind this questionable approach and to offer a solution considering Bouaoud et al.'s call to action (2022) [7]. It is scientifically agreed that mucosal changes may lead to Oral Squamous Cell Carcinoma. Point of care diagnosis of oral potentially malignant disorders (OPMD) is the central goal of early oral cancer screening. Science documents the 5-year survival to be 75% for stage I, dropping to 30% at stage IV [8,9]. The value of early detection is, at this moment, misunderstood and misvalued by those in charge.
