Case Studies in Oceanography and Marine Affairs Open University. Oceanography Course Team, 1991 This is the last volume in the six volume Open University set Each volume is required by students as a relevant part of the Open University course but designed so that it can equally be used as an individual textbook This volume differs from the others in the series in that it does not draw specifically upon traditional scientific disciplines The first part of the book provides an historical review of the

Law of the Sea culminating in the present day situation The second part is devoted to two case studies covering not only the scientific aspects of a particular oceanographic environment but also the social political and legal consequences and implications of human interactions with that environment Each volume in this set is well laid out and copiously illustrated with full colour photographs Questions to help develop arguments can be found in the text with answers provided at the back Each chapter concludes with a summary to help consolidate understanding before proceeding with the next section

Estimating Gulf of Maine Zooplankton Distributions Using Multiple Frequency Acoustic, Video and Environmental Data Joseph David Warren, 2001 This thesis develops methods useful for estimating zooplankton distributions in the field by combining acoustic scattering models and an integrated set of field data The accuracy of existing scattering models for fluid like and elastic shelled animals is determined by analysis of scattering data from individual animals in a laboratory tank Results indicate that simple two ray scattering models are accurate and allow predictions of size or orientation of an animal to be made for certain animal orientations A scattering model for gas bearing zooplankton is compared with in situ multiple frequency acoustic measurements from siphonophores Estimates of the numerical density of these animals are made using echo integration data from a scientific echo sounder Multiple frequency acoustic scattering data from a survey of an internal wave are analyzed to determine the contributions from biological and physical sources Net tow data provide information about biological scatterers while temperature and salinity profiles are used with a theoretical scattering model to predict contributions from physical sources Results indicate that scattering from physical sources is comparable to that from biological sources in certain regions and that scattering spectra may be used to distinguish these sources Improved estimates of biomass from acoustic scattering data were made by accounting for the scattering contributions from physical sources This is the first work to quantify the scattering contributions from biological and physical sources of scattering in a field study
