Health care reform bill aims to reduce costs and improve quality of care.

U.S. House of Representatives passed a bill on Tuesday that would reform the health care system, a move that could significantly reduce the federal deficit. The bill, known as the Affordable Care Act, would require states to expand their Medicaid programs to cover more low-income people. It also would create a new public option for health insurance, which would be a government-run plan that would compete with private insurers. The bill also would require insurers to cover pre-existing conditions and to allow people to buy insurance across state lines. The bill is expected to pass the House in the coming weeks.
