

KOBOLD Luziabyrussaurus Fugivorus

ANIMAL - SUBTERRANEAN GLOWING FUNGIVORE

The most well known species of the subterranean fauna of the new world, also called "fairy-goats", the Kobolds are bipedal reptiles that live in large hive-like groups called flocks, and take shelter in numbers against predators of their alien environment.

They're relatively small animals, reaching a maximum height of approximately 3 feet. What they lack in size, they make up in intelligence and speed.

Bioluminescent
lumbar membranes

These curious creatures seem to have developed a mutualistic relationship with a peculiar species of glowing mushrooms, the Sorrowful Bride. They are able to neutralize the fungi's otherwise deadly toxin in their stomach, and make them the main part of their diet. While the mushroom's main body is digested, the spores aren't. Eventually these spores are released and grow new fungi through the animal's feces. The bioluminescent enzymes are somehow redirected to the Kobold's Lumbar Membranes.

Their bioluminescent membranes are used for long distance communication and to temporarily blind predators. In recent observations I could ascertain that these creatures are capable of doing a large range of different patterns and intensities of glowing flashes, which indicates they have a rather complex language for non-sapient beings.

Perhaps the most fascinating aspect of the Kobold species is their hives, were they nest and seek shelter. Often called "castles" or "lighthouses", hundreds of Kobolds work together to raise these magnificent structures from the ground, sticking thousands of stones in place using a cement-like substance they regurgitate. These castles can become so tall that some of them connect the cave's ceiling to the ground.
