

MATERIAL HANDLING

Toolbox Talks

Depending on your job, you may spend a large portion of your day moving materials from one place to another. Whether you do so manually or with the aid of mechanical equipment, it should come as no surprise that material handling can be hazardous work.

Hazards and Injuries

Injuries often associated with material handling can include:

- Strains and sprains from lifting loads improperly or from carrying loads that are either too large, too heavy or both
- Fractures and bruises caused by being struck by materials or by being caught in pinch points

Personal Protective Equipment

The use of personal protective equipment can greatly reduce the hazards related to materials handling work.

- Hand and forearm protection, such as gloves, can prevent injuries from sharp or rough edges.
- Safety glasses or goggles can protect the eyes from falling objects, dust and debris.
- Steel-toed safety footwear can guard against crushing injuries resulting from falling or rolling objects.

As always, it's important to make sure you're wearing the appropriate PPE for the job.

Manual Material Handling Equipment

Manual material handling equipment, such as pallet jacks, hand trucks, and wheelbarrows, can reduce the risk of injury by reducing the weight of the load being lifted.

When using manual material handling equipment, always use proper lifting techniques to avoid injury.
